

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

EXPLANATORY PREFACE.

That space and time, which, in prefaces, are usually employed in setting forth the abjects and the utility of the work, I shall here employ in describing the contents of this work, and in explaining certain parts of it, which I think that it need of explanation; in doing which, I shall proceed in the order in which the matters lie before me.

1. The best begins with a GRURAL ACCOUNT of England and Wales; FIRST, stating the geographical situation, the houndaries, the extent, and the population of the whole country; arcount, showing how the country is divided into Copyrius, and into their subdivisions, this part being accompanied with a Map, showing how the campties are locally situated relatively to each other; Third, showing how the counties are distributed into Circuits, and pointing out the series of counties, are distributed into Diocress; and, Firth, showing how the counties or pasts of counties, are distributed into Diocress; and, Firth, showing how the special circuits; Fourth, showing how the special circuits are now divided for Parliamentary Purposes.

II. After this comes an langer to the Dictionary, containing the names, in alphabatical order, of the cities, boroughs, market towns, villages, hamlets, and things in all the counties, and having, against the name of each, the name of the county under which the particulars relating to each place will be found.

HI. The Dicksoners. Here the English counties, in alphabetical order, some that; and then the Welsh counties, in the same order. Then, under each county, come the names of all the cities, boroughs, market-towns, villages, hamsee and dishings in that county. Immediately preceding the name of each county there is a Map, describing the boundaries of the county, and pointing out

of each county there is an account of its soil, extent, products, population, rental, poor-rates, and of all other the interesting particulars belonging to it; under the name of each city and other principal place, there is a history of it as far as regards matters of general interest or of great curiosity; and, whereever there was formerly a monastic establishment, the nature and value of it are mentioned under the name of the place, whether that place be a city or hamlet. The distance from London is stated, in the case of cities, boroughs, and markettowns. And, in the case of the villages, hamlets, and tithings, their distances, and also their bearings, from the nearest city, borough, or market-town, are stated; and in all cases the population is stated. In places where there are markets or fairs, the days for holding them are stated, and mention is made of the commodities dealt in at the fairs. With regard to localities, it is not the great and well-known places, but the small and obscure places, of which we want a knowledge, How many scores of places have I received letters from, and there being no post-mark, or it being illegible, and it not being named in the date of the letter, have been unable to send an answer with any chance of its reaching its destination! Of how many places do we daily read in the newspapers, and in pamphlets and books, of which places we never before heard, of the local situation of which we know nothing; and yet, with regard to which, we, for some reason or other, wish to possess a knowledge! It was from the great and almost constant inconvenience which I experienced as to this matter, that induced me to undertake this most laborious work. For instance, if we were to read or hear something of a transaction at Tilford, how are we to know where Tilrord is, and what sort of a place it is? We might, from some circumstance, learn that it was in the county of Surrey; but one should not know whether it were a town or village, or what it was, nor in what part of the county it lay. My book, in the Index, tells us that it is in Surrey; in the Dictionary, it tells us, that it is a TITHING, that it is in the parish of FARNHAM, and that Farnham is a MARKET-TOWN, distant therefrom in a N. W. direction, that is, at 39 miles distant from London; and the county-map shows us, that this markettown lies at the western extremity of the county. In many cases it was unnecessary to state the distances of hamlets and tithings from any other place; but in all such cases the parish (being city, borough, town, or village) is made known: which makes our knowledge on the subject quite minute enough. For instance, in the county of Surrey, Bagshot is a hamlet, the distance of which from Chersey, the nearest town, is not stated; but the book tells us, that it is in the village and parish of WINDLESHAM, and that that village is 74 miles from CHERTSEY; so that here is nothing wanting. There now remain to be explained some things, which, if left unexplained, might lead to error. First, under the name, in the Dictionary, of each county, is given the number of parishes it contains. This frequently leaves out townships, a great many of which have separate parochial jurisdiction; but it was impossible, in all cases, to come at a correct knowledge of the facts relating to this matter: and, therefore, the paraily been taken as they stood in the official returns to Parliament. Shooms, as the Dictionary part was compiled before the Reform-law was passed, the number of members of Parliament returned by the several counties, cities, and beroughs, stands in this part of the book according to the rotten-borough system a but this matter is amply set to nights in the tables which are at the close of the book, and which it is now my business to describe.

IV. Next after the Dictionary comes a STATISTICAL TABLE (which is called No. I.); which states, against the name of each county in England, and against that of the whole of Wales, the following pieces of information; namely, its square miles, its acres of land, its number of parishes; number of markettowns: number of members of Parliament according to the new law; number of former monastic establishments; number of public charities; number of parishes which have no churches; number of parishes the population of each of which is under a hundred persons; number of parishes which have no parsonage-houses; number of parishes in which the parsonage-houses are unfit to live in; annual amount of the county poor-rates according to return of 1818. that being the last presented; number of paupers at that time; the annual rental of the county at the same time, no return having since been made; total population of the county according to return of 1821; number of houses in the county, in 1821, no return on that subject having been made since: the proportion between the poor-rates and the rental of the county; the proportion between the number of paupers and the number of houses in the county; the county poor-rates in 1776, by way of comparison; the number of persons to each square mile in the county; the number of acres of land to each person in the county; the number of acres of land to each house in the county; the whole of the male population in 1821, no distinction, in this respect, having been made in the last réturn; number of agricultural families, handicraft fami, lies, and other families, all according to the return of 1821, no information of this sort being given in the last return; number of agricultural males in the county; number of able labourers; number of acres of land in the county to each of its able labourers! In a table like this, containing such a mass of figures, it was next to impossible to avoid, either in author or printer, something in the way of error, and one, and I believe only one, has been committed here; and that is, in the statement of the number of acres of land to each person and to each house in the county of Middlesex. As I firmly believe, that a fiftieth part as much really useful information was never before given in so small a compass; so I am quite sure, that a hundredth part as much was never before published at a similar price. This Table, the whole of which the reader sees at two openings of the book, has cost me, first and last, months of labour.

V. In Table No. II. we come to the new and important Parliamentary Divisions and Distinutions. This Table again ranges the counties in their alphabetical ordit, and thews, at one view; the distribution of that sensing for the purposes connected with the election of members to here in parliabelet (according to the act of 1832); naming the counties, describing the divisions (where there are divisions) in the counties, stating the places for holding the election courts, stating the polling places in each county or division of a summer ty, naming the cities and boroughs in the county returning members to Parliament, and stating the number of members for each county, and each cityand borough; and, finally, the whole number of members returned by each county.

VI. But as the cities and boroughs are, in the Table No III. not accelementally a statement of their population, Table No III. gives them with their population in their new boundaries; and also the countries of England with their present populations, separate from that of the cities and belongies; and them the total population of each country, and the total number of members that each country is to return. Warms, for want of any return relative to a respecting these matters, is given (as to its population) in this Table without the distinction just mentioned.

VII. In order that sie part of this most interesting and most memoriable change, made by the Reform-law, may be left without information relative to it; and that information may be always at hand, Table No. IV. gives the names of all the rotten boroughs wholly embiered, and also of those half-cashisired, by the Act of 4 June, 1832, tegether with the counties in which they are, and the number of voters which they formerly had, this being matter which never ought to be effected from the minds of Englishmen.

Such is the book that I now present to my readers; and if it prove tirestance to them, I beseech them to think of what it must have been to its author? It has done one thing for me, at any rate; it has at last taught ine, at this end of thrue-score years of labour, that there is something that can faffgue; and it is a truly curious fact that I am putting this on paper in the VERY ROOM is which Dr. Jonnson wrote his plaintive preface to the predigious production of his patient toll.

ACCOUN'

ENGLAND AND

SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AND EXTENT.

1. This Country is in Europe, and lies between 49 deg. 50 min. and 55 deg. 40 min. of North latitude. 2. It is bounded, on the East, by the German Ocean; on the South, by the English Channel; on the West, by St. George's Channel; on the North, by Scotland, from which it is separated by the river Tweed, and by a line, which is imaginary, running along the Cheviot hills, and falling in at the head of the Frith of Solway. 3. Its extreme length, from the Lizard Point, in Cornwall, to the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, in Northumberland, is 403 English miles; and its extreme width, from the North Foreland, in Kent, to the Land's End, in Cornwall, is 370 English miles. 4. The whole country is computed to contain 49,450 square miles; and, according to returns made to the House of Commons, in the year 1831, the population was 14,171,591.

ENGLAND and Wales form one and the same country, as to all matters, except with regard to some particulars connected with the administration of justice. Wales is, for these purposes, considered as being divided into North Wales and South Wales; but in all other respects, the several counties of Wales are considered in the same light as the several counties in England; and I have now to speak of the DIVISIONS of this whole country:—FIRST, Of the divisions which have been made for the purposes of municipal government; SECOND, Of those which have been made for the purposes of the administration of justice in the superior courts; THIRD, Of the ecclesiastical divisions, or those which have been made for purposes connected with the affairs of the church as by law established; and, Fourth, Of the divisions, which have been made for the purpose of electing members to represent the people in parliament.

MUNICIPAL DIVISIONS.

The country is divided into COUNTIES, each having its lord lieutenant, its sheriff, its militia, its justices of the peace, and its interior peace-officers. Each county is divided into Hundreds, Lathes, Ridings, Wards, or WapenTAKES, one of which names is used in some counties, and others of them in other. counties, but always meaning the same thing; namely, the greatest subdivisions of the county. These greatest subdivisions are again divided into PARISHES. In some few cases there is a second subdivision before the parishes come; but, in all cases, the PARISHES come at last. The lord lieutenant is the commander of the militia, and is at the head of the justices of the peace; the sheriff is, throughout the county, the chief executor of the behests of the law: and the justices, who are in their several vicinages, the conservators of the peace, assemble, once in every three months, in general COUNTY-SESSIONS, to inquire into and punish offences coming within their jurisdiction. The cities and ancient boroughs, in the several counties, have their corporate justices of the peace, with sometimes an exclusive, and sometimes, with the county justices, a concurrent jurisdiction. 'The PARIANES have each its churchwardens, and overseers, and surveyor of the highways. The business of the first is to take care of the building of the church; that of the third to keep the roads of the parish in repair; but it is the second whose office is of the greatest importance, namely, that of administering relief to the poor, and of collecting, from the land and householders of the parish, the money necessary for that purpose; and the law makes it the bounden duty of an overseer of the poor, to take care, that, within the limits of his parish, no human being suffer from want of food, raiment, or shelter. The counties are 52 in number, 40 in England and 12 in Wales. A list of the names of them will be found under the next head; and, in their proper order in the book, all the particulars as to extent, population, hundreds, cities, towns, parishes, &c. relating to each will be amply stated.

JUDICIAL DIVISIONS.

Each COUNTY has, as we have seen, a complete government in itself; and it pays all the expenses by tuxes raised within itself, for the purpose of sustaining this government and of carrying it on. The general or royal government interferes only in the appointing of the lords lieutenant, the sheriffs, the county-justices of the peace, and the officers of the militia, and in the administration of justice in the civil causes, and in the case of grave crimes. For this purpose, JUDGES, commissioned by the king, are sent into the several counties twice in every year. Two judges go into each county, and each two are commissioned to take a certain number of counties, lying contiguous to one another, and to go from county to county, until the business be ended. The counties are, for this purpose, divided into circuits, or ROUNDS, eight in number; and to know the particulars of which division is a matter of occasional importance to every man in the kingdom. These particulars are all contained in the following Table, which exhibits, First, The names of the whole of the English counties in alphabetical order, and of the Welsh in the same order; SECOND, The cities and towns at which the judges hold their sittings, which, in this case, are, in the old Norman language, called ASSIZES, while the towns at which the judges sit are called ASSIZE-TOWNS; THIRD, Against the name of each county, the name of the zircuit within which it is embraced; FOURTH, The names of all the circuits, in alphabetical order; FIFTH, The names of the counties embraced in each circuit. Thus the reader has the whole of this matter under his eye at one view; observing only, that, in some few of the counties, the ASSIZES are held afternately at different towns.

ECCLESIASTICAL DIVISIONS.

PROVINCES are the grand divisions. There are two of these, that of CANTERBURY and that of YORK, each of which has its ARCHBISHOP. Then these Provinces are divided into Dioceses, each of which has its BISHOP. There are twenty-six dioceses, each of which takes the name of the CITY which is situated within the diocese. Of these twenty-six dioceses, or bishoprics, the two archbishops have one each. They are bishops as well as archbishops; one of them having the bishopric of Canterbury, and the other having the bishopric of York. So that there are but twenty-six archbishops and bishops in the whole. The dioceses are divided into Benefices, which generally consist of one PARISH each; but sometimes of two or more, which, since the PROTESTANT REFORMATION, have been "united" by acts of the parliament. There are, besides these divisions, " archdeaconries" and " rural deaneries;" but though they serve as a pretext for drawing immense sums of money out of the pockets of the people, they are of so little practical dse, that people in general do not know, and never have heard, that there are any such institutions in existence; and as to the Deans and Chapters, with all their Prebendaries, Canons, &c. the people know not the meaning of the words, and only know that the persons bearing the names wallow in wealth, derived from tithes and other public property, and render no sort of service in return.

With regard to the revenues of the Church, and to the distribution of these revenues amongst the different classes of the Clergy and Lay Impropriations, that is a subject foreign to this work, which professes to treat only of the several territorial divisions and subdivisions of the country; but the reader wifl find, in Table No. I, an account of the number of parishes in each county, in which parishes the clergy have suffered the churches to fall down, and also an account of the number of parishes in which they have suffered the parsonage-houses to fall down, or to become unfit to live in.

The THREE FOLLOWING TABLES exhibit the above-mentioned divisions in the clearest and most satisfactory manner. The first shows what Dioceses belong to each of the two Provinces (the Dioceses being ranged in alphabetical order), and also shows what Counties (or parts of counties) belong to each Diocese. The SECOND contains an alphabetical list of all the Counties, and shows what diocese each county is in; or, in cases where the County is distributed between two or more Dioceses, it shows what that distribution is. The THIRD contains an alphabetical list of all the Dioceses, and shows how many Benefices and how many Churches and Chapels there are in each Diocese.

BEDFORDSHIRE.

AN INLAND COUNTY of England, bounded on the North by Huntingdonshire and Northamptonshire, on the East by Hertfordshire and Cambridgeshire, on the South by Buckinghamshire and Hertfordshire, and on the West by Buckinghamshire. It is in an irregular somewhat oval form, and is about 34 miles long and 19 broad. The area, or superficial measure, of it, is 463 square miles, or 296,320 statute acres. The country is generally level, and the land very good: a large proportion is pasture land; but the arable is, on an average, much better than that of the average of England; and some part of it is finer, it is supposed, than any other land in England. It is sufficiently wooded, is rich in pasture and in all sorts of cattle and agricultural produce, and has very little waste or poor land.—It has no large manufactories; but a part of the women and children are employed in the making of lace and of strew-plat; though these are not in amount sufficient to prevent us from calling this a purely agricultural county.-Its RIVERS are the Ouse and the Ivel, the former of which divides the county into two parts, and is navigable as far as the borough of Bedford, which is the capital of the county.—The PRO-DUCTS of Bedfordshire are, corn, meat of all sorts in very great abundance, butter; and all of the finest quality.—This county is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY; in the Diocusz or Lincoln, and in the NORFOLE CIRCUIT.—It is divided into nine hundreds; namely, Barford, Biggleswade, Clifton, Flitt, Manshead, Redbornestoke, Stodden, Willey, Wixhamtree.-There are 131 PARISHES and TOWNSHIPS, and with distinct perochial jurisdiction; and 10 market-towns; namely, Ampthill, Bedford, Biggles-wade, Dunstable, Harrold, Luton, wade, Dunstable, Harrold, Luton, Leighton Buzzard, Potton, Shefford, Woburn. Bedford town sends 2 members to parliament; and its 2 members, with the 2 for the county, are all that this county is permitted to send.—Before the Protestant "Reformation," or devastation, there were 18 monastic establishments at the following places: Bedford, Biggleswade, Bissemede, Caldwell, Chicksand, Dunstable, Eston-Socon, Elstow, Farle, Grovesbury, Harwood, Melchbourn, Market Street, Newenham, Northill, Warden, Woburn; under the names of which places a particular account of these establishments is given. There are 24 Public Charities in this county, mostly very ancient.—Of the 131 PARISHES which the county contains, there are 6 which have less than 100 inhabitants each; 10 which have no parsonage houses; 39 which have parsonage houses, which, in a return made to parliament in 1818, the incumbents represent as unfit for them to live in; and, in the whole county, there are 124 churches; there being 7 parishes and townships with no churches. poor-rates of the county amounted annually, agreeably to a return made to perliament in 1818, to 80,6581. 1s. 54d.; the number of PAUPERS was 7,030; the ANNUAL RENTAL of all the real property of the county amounted to 343,6821. 19.

10d.; the POPULATION, by return of 1821, was 83,716; and the number of houses 15,412. So that the poor-rates amounted to a fourth part, within a fraction, of the whole of the rental; and there were, on an average, 1 pauper to every two houses throughout the county. According to the same return of 1818, the annual poor-rates of this whole county amounted, in 1776, to only 16,3101.—There are, in this county, on an average, 181 persons to each square mile, which is about 4 acres of land to every person; and there are, within a fraction, 18 acres of land to every inhabited house, including the most miserable houses in town and country, and not excepting alms-houses.-The male population of the county is 40,385. The return states 10,754 families to be employed in agriculture; 4,827 families in trade and handicraft; and 1,792 families to consist of all other descriptions of persons. The male agricultural popula-tion must, therefore, be 25,000 all but a fraction. Of these we must allow one half to be children, men past labour, or men infirm: there then remain, including the farmers themselves, 12,500 agricultural labourers; that is to say, one labourer, on an average, to every $35 acres of land.

BERKSHIRE.

An INLAND COUNTY of England, bounded on the North by Oxfordshire and  $\Gamma$  tekinghamshire, being separated from them by the river Thames; on the East by Surrey; on the South by Hampshire; on the West and North-west by Wiltshire and Gloucestershire. Its length is about 40 miles, and its breadth about 50. Its form is uncommonly irregular; but it is taken to be shout 140 miles in circumference. It contains 756 square miles, and 483,840 acres, statute measure; about one half is estimated as arable, two-thirds of the remainder pasture, and the met woodlands and waste, of which latter, and of a very poor description, that is a considerable tract, beginning, on the east, near to Windsor Great Park, and, with little intermission, continuing on nearly to Hungerford; that is to say, from one end of the county to the other. This tract is a strip of sandy and gravelly land, all slong on nearly the southern edge of the county. With the exception of this tract, the land of Berkshire is generally good; and especially in the Vale of Berkshire, in nearly the centre of which lies the ancient town of Wantage, the name of which (it being the birth-place of AL-FRED) ought to be dear to every Englishman. This is a pleasant county, very beautifully wooded, salubrious for the far greater part, well watered and assisted by the RIVERS Thomes, Kennett, Ladden, Ock, and Lambourn, and by the canals, which have been made in the county. As to the PRODUCTS of this county, they are chiefly agricultural, there being hardly any manufacturing corried on in any part of it; and, the soil being generally good, these products are abundant in proportion, and rather of superior quality. Berkshire is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY; in the Diocese or Salismune; and is one of the counties of the Oxford Can-cuit. It is divided into 20 Hendreds, named as follows :-Beynburst, Bray, Charleon, Compton, Cookham, Fair-cross, Farringdon, Ganneld, Hormar, Kintbury-Eagle, Lambourn, Moreton, Ock, Reading, Rippleamers, Shriven-ham, Sonning, Theale, Wantage, Wargrave. There are in the county 148 PARISHES; there are 12 MARKET-TOWNS, namely, Abingdon, Farringdon, Hun-gerford, Ilsley, Lambourn, Maidenhead, Newbury, Oskingham, Reading Wellingford, Wantage, and Windser. Of these Abingdon, Reading, Wallingford, and Windsor, are boroughs, the first sending 1 member to parliament, and the last three sending 2 members each, which, together with the 2 members for the county, make 9 members for this county. READING is generally looked upon as the CAPITAL of the county; but, as the scene of elections and other county affairs, Abingdon shares with it. Before the Propestant "Reformation," or devastation, there were 14 Monastic establishments, at the following places; Abingdon, Hisham, Chaddleworth, Farringdon, Henley, Newbury, Reading, Domington, Shotteshrook, Steventon, Strathfield-Say, and Wallingford; under the names of which places, a particular account of these establishments is given. There are 57 Public Charities (most of them very ancient) in this county, 8 of which are at Abingdon, and 12 at Newbury. Of the 148 periahes which the county contains, there es which the county contains, there is 1 which has no church; 4 which have less than 100 inhabitants each; 7 which have no parsonage-houses; and 21 which have parsonage-houses, which, in a return made to parliament in 1818, the incumbents represent as unfit for them to live in. The Poor-RATES of this county amounted annually, agreeably to a return made to parliament in 1818, to 185,172L 17s. 10d.; the number of Paupers was 19,013; the An-MUAL RENTAL of all the real property of the county amounted to 652,0821. 10s.; the Population, by return of 1821, was 131,977, and the number of houses 24,705. So that, the poor-rates amounted to within a fraction of a fourth part of the rental, and there were, on an average, 3 paupers to every 4 houses throughout the county. According to the same return of 1818, the annual poor-rates of this whole county amounted, in 1776, to only 35,989l., while those of the town of Reading alone now amount annually to about 12,000). There are in this county 175 persons to each square mile; that is, about 4 acres of land to every person; and there are, within a fraction, 19 acres of land to every inhabited house, not excepting the most miserable of places in the poorest of towns, and not even excepting almshouses. The male population of the county is 65,546. The return states 14,759 families to be employed in agriculture; 8,773 families in trade and handicraft, and 4,156 families to consist of all other descriptions of persons. The male agricultural population must, therefore, be 54,924: of these, about one half must be children, must be past labour, or infirm; there, then, remnin, including the farmers themselves, 17,462 agricultural labourers; that is to say, one labourer, on an average, to every 28 acres of land.

ABINGDON, seeted on the Isis, in the hundred of Hormer, 56 miles N.W. from Reading. It derives its name from an Abbey of Benedictine Monks, 500 in number, in the time of the Ancient Britons, where Constantine the Great is said to have been educated; it was destroyed by the Danes, A.D. 956; but afterwards rebailt by the Abbot Ethelwold, through the bounty of King Edred and King Edgar. Valued, at the dissolution, at 2,042i. 2s. 8dd.; granted 1 Edw. VI. to Sir Thomas Seymont; and, he having been attained, and the estate having returned to the crown, it was granted in the 5th Edw. VI. to Sir Thomas Wrath. It has two parishes, St. Helen's and St. Nicholas. It is a corporate town, having a mayor, nine aldermen, and sixteen assistants. It sends one member to parliament. The number of voters is about 300. Markets, Mon. and Fri. Fairs, first Mon. in Lept; May 6, June 20, and Aug. 5, for eattle; Sept. 19, and Mon. before Old Michaelmas, for hiring servants, and Dec. 11 for horses and cattle. Popula. 5,137.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.

AN INLAND COUNTY of England. It is bounded on the north by Northamptonshire; on the East by Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, and Middlesex; on the South by Berkshire, and on the West by Oxfordshire. Its shape is oblong, being about fifty miles in length and sixteen in breadth. It has eight hundreds; namely, Ashendon, Aylesbury, Buckingham, Burnham, Cottesloe, Desborough, Newport, and Stoke. Its principal Rivers are, the Thames, the Ouse, and the Colna. It is divided from Berkshire by the Thames. It has fifteen MARKET Towns; namely, Buckingham and Aylesbury, which share between them the honour belonging to the county town; Amersham, Besconsfield, Chesham, Colnbrook, Ivinghoe, Newport-Pagnell, Olney, Risborough, Stoney-Stratford, Wendever, Wycombe, Winslow, Great Marlow. This county sends two members to parliament, and two members are also sent from each of the following boroughs of this county; Buckingham, Ayleshury, Chipping-Wycombe, Wendover, Great Marlow, Agmondesham, or Americam, making the whole number of members for the county, twelve. It is in the Province or Cantennuay, principally in the DESCRIPT OF LINCOLN, but is partly in those of Canterbury and London, and it is in the Nonrolk Clacuit. It contains 740 square miles, or 473,600 acres, and 202 parishes. It had 27 public charities; it has now 1 parish with no church, 13 parishes, with less than 100 inhabitants in each, and 23 parishes without personage houses, besides 28 parishes in which the parsonage houses are reported by the incumbents to be unfit for them to reside in. The poor-rates of this county, according to a return laid before Parliament in 1818. were 165,321/. 15c. 114d.; the number of paupers, 14,934; the rental of the county, 644,1294 12s. 11d. The population, according to a return made to parliament in 1821, is 134,068; the number of inhabited houses in the county, 24,876; of uninhabited houses, 549; the poor-rates bear towards the rental of the county the proportion of one quarter; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is one to every two houses; the poorrates of the county in 1776 were $1,1301.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 181; the number of acres to a person, 5; the number of acres to every house, 15. In the year 1821 the male population was 64,867; the number of families employed in agriculture, 16,640; the number of families employed in handicraft, 8,318; the number of other families, 3,909; the number of agricultural males, 37,391; the number of able labourers, 18,695; the number of acres of land in the whole county to every able labourer, 34. southern part of the county is princi-pally taken up with what are called the Chiltern Hills, which are compased of chalk, covered, in many places, with beech woods. According to meient historians, this district was almost all forest. It is calculated that, even now, the South-western part of the county is occupied to the extent of full one-sixth with beech woods. The Chiltern Hills stretch across from Bedfordshire to Oz. fordshire, entering Buckinghamshire a little distance above Tring in Hertfordshire, and taking a sweep round by Prince's-Risborough to Chipping-Wy-combe, and then into Oxfordshire. This rich vale of Aylesbury lies under these hills, and is composed, for the greater part, of a rich, deep loam, ex-ceeded by no district in England for its fertility. The northern part of the county is of a more mixed character: there is much good land in it, and a good deal of clay; but it partaken, in many places, of the sandy nature of the adjoining part of the county of Bedford. There is not much waste land in Buckinghamshire: Wickham Heath, of about 1500 acres, Iver Heath, about 1150 acres, and Stoke Heath, about 1600 acres, are the three most considerable wastes. The agriculture of the hills is wheat, barley, and oats; that of the vale of Aylesbury, grazing, with corn-crops, and that of the northern part of the county, grazing, corn-growing, and woodland. The cattle of this county are not peculiar to it; the horses are black, and of the half-cart, half-coach breed; the neat cattle that are fatted here are brought out of Lincolnshire, Herefordshire, and Yerkshire; the sheep are principally the same as those most commen in Wiltshipe and Berkshire. There are no mines in the county, and the manufactures are of lace and veils, which are carried on principally in the neighbourhoods of Olney and Hanslope.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

AN INLAND COUNTY. It is bounded on the North by Lincolnshire, on the East by Norfolk and Suffolk, on the South by Essex and Hertfordshire, and on the West by Bedford and Huntingdon. is about 40 miles long, and 25 broad. It has fifteen hundreds, namely, Arming-ford, Chesterton, Cheveley, Chilford, Flendish, Longstow, Northstow, Passworth, Radfield, Staine, Staplos, Triplow, Wetherley, Whittlesford, and the Isle of Ely. Its RIVERS are, the Cam, the Nen, and the Ouse. It has one city and eight market towns; Ely (the city), and Cambridge, Caxton, Linton, March, Newmarket, Thorney, Wisbeach, and part of Royston (the market towns). It sends two members to parliament for the county, and two for the University. Cambridgeshire is in the Province or CANTERBURY, and principally in the Diocess of ELY, a small part only being in that of Norwich. It is in the Norfolk circuit. The surface of this county is described by William of Malmsbury as beautiful in the extreme, a plain level, covered perpetually with the finest herbage, with orchards and with vineyards, the vines either creeping on the ground or tied to poles. A considerable part of it was, no doubt, unavailable fen-land until about the year 1634; when some noblemen and gentlemen undertook to drain it, which they did in a great degree, in about four years, and they then received a charter of incorperation, under the title of "Conservators of the Great Level of the Fens;" but the complete history of the fens and of this corporation is to be found in the " History of the Fens," recently published by Mr. Wells, the registrar to the corporation. There are still, according to an agricultural survey of the country, 150,000 acres of unimproved fea-land. The county is chiefly arable and pasture, there being but little wood. There are no manufactures of any con-sequence, if we except the celebrated manufacture of cheese at the village of Cottenham, where 1200 cows are said to be continually kept for the purpose of making this article, which is well known by the name of Cottenham cheese. county contains 858 square miles, or 549,120 acres, and 167 parishes. It had 27 monastic institutions; 24 public charities. It has 3 parishes with no church; 8 parishes containing less than a hundred people; 45 parishes with no parsonage-houses; 36 parishes in which the parsonage-houses are unfit to live in. The poor-rates of the county are 109,4671. 13s, 01d.; the number of paupers is 11,178; the rental of the county is 655,2201. 17s. 2d.; the population in 1821 was 121,909; the number of houses is 20,869; the rates, compared with the rental, is one-sixth; the paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 2 houses; the poor-rates in 1776 were 17,7291.; the number of persons to a mile in this county is 258; the number of scree to a person, 8; the number of acres to a house, 26; the male population, 60,301; the number of families employed in agriculture, 15,536; the number of families employed in handicraft, 6,964; the number of other families, 3,103; the number of the agricultural male population 36,985; the number of able labourers, 18,492, and the number of acres of land to each able labourer, 29.

- ELSWORTH, 2 miles N. from Caxton. Popula. 773.
- BLY (City), 66 miles N.W. from London. Popula. 5,079. Ely is situated on an eminence in the island of that name, and is 15 miles E. from the town of Cambridge. It is supposed by many, and among them the venerable Bede, that it derives its name from the word cel, owing to the circumstance of the neighbourhood having, from time immemorial, abounded in sels; a fact well authentieated by the circumstance of its kaving been anciently the custom for the lerds of the maners within the island, to receive prodigious quantities of eels in payment, or in part-payment, of the services due to them as lords. The first settlement in the island was by Ethelbert, the Saxon, who built a church in Cratendans, now Cratendon Field, about a mile from the present city. This, however, being destroyed, Etheldreda, a pious lady, daughter of Anna, king of East Anglia, and wife of Tombert, prince of this county, formed the design of creating a religious establishment. She began about the year 673 building near the site of the present cathedral, and having completed a noble monastery, she endowed it with all the revenues of the island; became Lady Abbess, and persuaded her eldest sister, with her daughter and grand-daughter, to live there also under her direction. Etheldreda died of an epidemic disorder in 678; and, in 870, the Danes invaded and sacked the place; but, about the year 970, it was repaired completely by Brithnoth, who was made Abbot of it by King Edgar. It flourished till the time of William I., who had to besiege the island twice before he could obtain possession of it. When he had succeeded, the Monastery of Ely was seized and partly sacked, but Theodwin, a Monk, whom William had appointed Abbot to it, succeeded in getting back the gold and silver, of which it had been plundered. Godfrey, his successor, in 1075, prevailed on William to restore to the monastery all its ancient rights and privileges. Godfrey, being removed to Malmsbury, Simeon became Abbot, and he it was who laid the foundation of the present magnificent cathedral, about the year 1081, but he, dying in his 100th year, in 1093, left it to his successor, Richard, to finish. This Richard appears to have been the last Abbot. tried to prevail on the king (Hen. I.) to make it a bishop's see, which, however, was not done till after his death. It was then effected, by curtailing a little from the see of Lincoln. Hen. VIII. granted a charter, by which the church was created a cathedral, and the establishment made to consist of a dean. a priest, and eight prebendaries, with other ministers. At the devastation in the reign of this monster, the revenues of this cathedral and the monastery were 3,219l. 5s. 4d., now about 64,385l. 6s. 8d. Ely is the only city in England which does not send members to parliament. It is not incorporated, nor has it any jurisdiction distinct from the rest of the island. It has one chief-justice: the Spring Assizes for the whole island are held here, and the Easter and Michaelmas Quarter Sessions. It contains 2 parishes; Holy Trinity and St. Mary's; and it is divided into three wards, each of which has its separate constable. Ely market is on Thursday. There are two annual fairs, each lasting nine days; one beginning on Ascension day, and the other on the 29th of October. The latter was, in ancient times, celebrated for the sale of ribbons of divers colours, which were held in great veneration, as having touched the shrine of St. Etheldreda, and, being called St. Awdrey's ribbons, some etymologists imagine this the origin of the word tandry. There are no manufactures of any consequence either in the city or in the island. The city itself consists of one long street of well-built houses, some having the appearance of antiquity, and of some in-ferior streets, irregular, and neither lighted nor paved. These latter are interspersed by market and fruit-gardens, very judiciously cultivated, and whence a considerable part of the produce goes to the London markets. In the modern history of Ely there is one fact which I could hardly leave unnoticed; the flogging of local militia-men in the year 1809, under a guard of German troops, which German troops were quartered at Bury at the time, and brought from that place to awe the English militia into suffering this horrible degradation. Having, in the Political Register, raised my voice against this, having exclaimed against the introduction of foreign troops to England under any pretence, and particularly against using these merce-naries in this illegal manner, I was prosecuted by George the Third, for libel on himself; and, Ellenborough being chief-justice, Spencer Perceval (since shot by Bellingham in the lobby of the House of Commons), prime minister, and Vicary Gibbs, attorneygeneral, I was sentenced to two years' imprisonment in Newgate, to pay a fine of one thousand pounds to the king (who went mad while I was in prison, and died mad some years after I came out), and to find two sureties to be bound in a bond of SOOL penalty each, for my good behaviour for seven years! All which I underwent.

CHESHIRE.

Tais county is bounded on the North by Lancashias, on the East and South-east by Derbyshire and Staffordshire, on the South by Shropshire and part of Flintshire, and on the West and North-west by Denbighshire and part of Flintshire. About 56 miles long, and 40 broad. It is divided into seven hundreds; namely, Broxton, Bucklow, Eddisbury, Macolesfield, Nantwich, Northwich, and Wirrall Its principal Rivens are, the Dee, the Wesser, and the Mersey. It has 13 Manuse-rowns, Altringhem, Congletta, Kautsferd, Macolesfield, Malpas, Middlewich, Nantwich, Northwich, Sandbach, Stockport, Chester, Tarporley, and Neston. It returns 2 members to Parliament for the shire, and 2 for the city of Chester. This county contains 1052 square miles, or 673,280 acres, and 90 parishes. It had 16 monastic establishments, and 36 public charities; it has 2 parishes with no churches, 6 parishes with less than 100 people, 47 parishes with less than 100 people, 47 parishes with parsonage-house unfit to live in. The parriates were in 1818 164,7371, 15s. 34d.; the number of paupers, 19,244; the restal of the county, according to a staura made to Parliament in 1818, was 1,083,063l. 12s. 3d.; the population, according to a return laid before Parliament in 1821, was 270,098; the number of inhabited houses in 1821, was 47,094; the number of uninhabited houses at the same epoch, 1,212; the poor-rates bear the proportion of onesixth of the sental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 3 houses; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 28,9221.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 257; the number of acres to a person, 2; the number of acres to a house, 14; the male population in 1821 was 132,952; the families employed in agriculture were 18,120 in number; the families employed in handicraft were 27,105 in number; the number of other families was 6,709; the agricultural male population, 46,307; sble labourers, 23,153. The number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer is 24. It is in the Pao VINCE OF YORK, and in the Diocese or CHESTER, and is in the NORTH-WALES CIRCUIT. It has been called the Vale Royal of England, said to be from the circumstance of the famous Abbey of Vale Royal, situate nearly in the centre of the county, rather than from the superiority of its beauty or richness. The surface of it is generally flat, there being not much uneven ground, excepting the high hills in the eastern parts of it. The land is, for the most part, a rich, stiff mould, or even clay, in many parts, with a mixture of red grit-rock and moor-pest. There are but few woods of any extent; the whole country being arable and pasture, and full as much (if not more) of the latter than the former. Besides the rivers above enumerated, it has the advantage of being very much intersected by canals. Its produce is CHEESE, for which it is famous all the world over, and which is produced principally in the neighbourhoods of the towns of Nantwich, Congleton, and Middlewich, and the parish of Over, and along the banks of the Weever; salt is produced in great quantity at Northwich; and the manufacture of silk, muslin, and calico, is carried on to a great extent in the towns and neighbourhoods of Macclesfield, Stockport, Knutsford, Sandbach, Nantwich, and Thelwall.

CHESTER. This city is in the Prevince or Your, and in the Diocres or CHESTER, and is in the Nonth-WALES CINCUST. It is 180} miles N.W. from London, 20 miles from the main sea, about 20 miles from Denbigh, 40 miles from Shrawsbury, 46 from Stafford, 76 from Derby, and 75 from Lancaster. It stands on a rocky eminence on the banks of the river Dee, which is 100 yards broad at Chester bridge, and which, about 18 miles far-ther, towards Hawarden Castle, becomes an estuary of, at least, 3 miles broad. Some historians have made this a place of the greatest antiquity, giving it even some antediluvian patrons and names; later ones make it the possession of the Romans about the year 607, when the Sexon Ethelsth best the then king of Powys, and amerced this country to his own. The Danes committed great ravages on it, but were ultimately driven out of it in about 895. It then remained some time in ruins, till about 907 or 908; it was restored by Ethelfreds, the daughter of Alfred the Greet, who repaired the city walls, and, sceording to pane, extended them as as to include the castle, which, before that, stood without the ancient limits. After the Comquest, William granted the county to Hagh Lapus, making him Earl of Chester, and from that time it has been an earldom, in the family of Layes, until that became extinct, when it fell to the crown in Henry the Third's reign; and it has, since that, generally been samewed to the crown, the late king having been the last Earl. The town suffered considerable damage from the siege that it stood from the Parliament army in 1643. In the reign of William III. it was made one of the six cities of residence for an assay-master, who authorized the issuing of coin. limits of the uncient city appear to have been precisely those of the present, from the strict resemblence of the form of the walls to a Roman camp. These walls are in circumference one mile and three quarters and one hundred yards. The city consists of four principal streets, running from the centre towards the points north, east, south, and west, and each terminating by a gate; as North-gate, East-gate, Bridge-gate, and Water-gate. These gates were all (except the north gate, of which the citizens had the charge) held in serjeunty by different families, who were estitled to the tells; but the corporation have, at different times, bought up all these. The streets were excurated from a bed of rock, and are sunk several feet beneath the surface, which has been the course of a remarkable construction of the houses. Level with the streets are low shops, and shove them galleries on each side, reaching from street to street, open in front, and balustraded. These are execodingly ourlous to strangers, who, when in them, imagine themselves up one pair of stairs. The whole appears as if the first staries of the fronts of all the houses were laid open, and made to communicate with each other. The prin-cipal streets are intersected by smaller ones, dividing the inclosed spaces into smaller equarie; and some of them are terminated by smaller gates, called posterns. The monastic establishments and public charities of Chester were, a BENEDICTIVE ABSET, OF NUMBERY, founded in Saxon times, and much en-larged afterwards by Eldods, Countess of Mercia. Its revenues were 1,0731. 17s. 73d. when Hen. VIII. seised it and granted it away, or, in present money, 24,4771. 13s. 6d. A BENEDICTIVE NUNwray, founded in the reign of William I., by Randal, Earl of Chester; valued, at the supercasion, 994. 16s. 2d., mow worth 1,9961. 12s. 4d., and granted, by Hen. VIII., to Urian Breretonend hiscog. Hen. VIII., to Urian Brevetou and bis son St. Jonn's Collings, founded by King Etheired, in the year 689: worth annually at the dissolution, 881. 16s. 8d., worthnow 1,776l. 13s. 4d., granted, by Queen Efficabeth, to John Fortseene. St. Jogn's Hospital, possessing succently great privileges; and, at the dissolution, à chaplain and sin poer brothren, when the yearly income was 284. 19e. 4d. now worth 570l. 6s. 8d. A FREARY, founded, southward of the city, by a Bishop of Chester; granted, by Hen. VIII., to one John Coke. A Pranciscus FRIARY, founded in the reign of Hen. HI.; greated to the same. A Course LITE FRIARY, founded in the year 1279, by a Thomas Stadham, Gent,; granted, by Men. VIII., to the same John Coke. The first of these was a noble and exthe first or need we a nost a mile ex-tensive edifice, and a considerable part of it remains in ruins at this day. Chester now contains 2 parishes, 1 cathedral, and 9 parish churches, and a population of 19,949 persons. Being a county palathe, it did not send mem-bers to Parliament till the time of Hea. VIII. The night of election is in the freemen: the government of the town is in a corporation, consisting of a

men, and 40 common councilmen. Its commerce is principally with Ireland; there being a considerable quantity of Irish linen imported annually, and it has, besides, some little foreign trade. There is also a little manufacturing of glores, snuff, and tobacco-pipes, and a good deal of ship-building. Fairs are held on the last Thursday in February, at Midsummer, and at Michaelmas, and the weekly markets are on. Wednesdays and Saturdays. Chester is remarkable for its healthiness; as is proved by a comparative statement of the number of deaths, in proportion to the living, in the towns of London, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, and several others, where, upon an average, there die annually one out of every 24, and in Chester only one out of every 40.

CORNWALL.

THIS COUNTY forms the South-Western extremity of the Kingdom, surrounded in all parts by the sea, except the East, where it joins Devonshire, the boundary of the county being marked by the river Tamer. Its shape is angular; it is 90 miles in length, and in breadth, from 25 to 7 miles. It is divided into nine hundreds; -- East, Keriar, Lesnewth, Penwith, Powder, Pyder, Stratton, Trigg, and West. Its main Rivers are, the Tamar, the Cober, the Fall, and the Camel. Its principal Towns are Lannceston and Falmouth, and it has 23 Market-Towns; namely, Stratton, Launceston, Camelford, Callington, Padstow, Bodmin, Liskeard, Saltash, St. Columb-Major, Lostwithiel, East-Looe, St. Austel, Grampound, Redruth, Truro, Tregony, Penryn, Falmouth, St. Ives, Merazion, Helston, Pensance, and Lands-End. The county sends 2 members to parliament, and the following boroughs, also in the county, send 2 each ;-Saltash, St. Michaels, Helston, St. Ives, Tregony, Truro, Fowey, Bossiney, Penryn, Launceston, Newport, Lost-withiel, St. Mawee, Camelford, West-

Looe, East-Looe, Grampound, St. Germans, Bodmin, Liskeard, Callington. There are in this county 1327 square miles, or 849,280 acres, and 203 parishes. It had 15 monastic institutions, 24 public charities; it has 5 parishes with no church; 2 parishes containing less than a hundred people; 35 parishes with no personage-house; 31 parishes. in which the parsonage-house is unfit to live in. The Poor-RATES of the county are 133,356/. 12s. 64d., the number of PAUPERS is 13,032; the rental is 916,0601.7s.; the population in 1321 was 257,447; the number of houses is 43,873; the rates, compared with the rental, onesixth; the paupers, compared with the number of houses, 1 to every 3 houses; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 21,1971. The number of persons to a mile in this county is 194; the number of acres to a person, S; the number of acres to a house, 19; the male population, 124,817; the number of families employed in agriculture, 19,302; the number of families employed in handicraft, 15,543; the number of other families, 6,357; the number of the sgricultural male population, $8,478; the number of able labourers, 99,236, and the number of acres of land to each able labourer is 28. Coppwell is in the Province of Can-TREBURY, and in the Diocess or Ex-RTER.—The general appearance of the county, to those who travel the high reads through it, is far from being handsome, owing to the barrenness of a considerable part of it; a ridge of berron hills extends from one end of the county to the other, supporting nothing but a wretched breed of sheep and some goats ; yet the yelleys are beentiful and very productive in corn, pasture, and (away from the sea-shore) of wood also; and in the eastern parts of the county, of apples. The air is humid, but celebrated for its mildness and salubriousness, and the inhabitants are famous for longavity. It abounds in bays all along an extensive line of southern coast, and here innumerable families gain their livelihood in the mileband and other fisheries; the pilchard fishery alone being said to produce not a less sum annually than 50,0001. But the most important produce of this county is its copper, tin, and lead : of all these metals there are extensive mines, chiefly in the neighbourhood of St. Austel, and from that to the Lands-End. In the year 1810, the coppermines alone are said to have produced 76,284 tons, worth 769,903l. 17s. 6d., at 194. 24. per ton; and they support a population of 60,000 persons. The affairs of these mines are regulated by a code, called the Stannary Laws; and these laws are under the administration of a lordwarden, a vice-warden, and 24 gentlemen tinners, whose acts have the same force as an Act of the Parliament itself. The ore is compelled to be carried every quarter of a year to one of the towns of Launceston, Lostwithiel, Truro, Helstone, or Pensance, which are called the Stannary towns, there to be made up into blocks of from 200 to 300 weight each, and stamped with the Duchy arms before it can be sold. The soil of Cornwall is very various; but a great deal of it consists of black mould, mixed with small gravel, and a slaty soil. In agriculture, the Cornish people have never been famous. They used to let their pasture-land to the Devonshire graziers, and attend chiefly to the tin and coppermines; and now they farm their land in alternate crops of corn and pasture, the former till it will bear no more, and then the latter, by way of giving it rest. The Scilly Islands, about 30 miles from the Land's-End, are generally mentioned with Cornwall, because they, by their situation, belong more to that county than to any other part of England. The whole number of them is upwards of 140, counting every disjointed rock; but there are 27 islands more or less habitable, and of these St. Mary's is the principal; that being 24 miles long, and nine or ten miles in circumference. The population of the whole is estimated at 2,252. They are under the spicitual diraction of the Bishop of Exeter; governed by a governor who dispenses the criminal law, and by 12 of the principal inhabitants, who meet monthly Hough-Town, St. Mary's, to compromise civil disputes; and the authority of these latter is wholly customary. The islands are let under lease from the crown, to the Duke of Leeds, et 401. rent a year, for 31 years, from 1800. It is supposed, that these islands were such larger in extent formerly, as the Roman writers mention them as "the ten tin islands." They produce con in small quantity, small cattle, rabbits, and plenty of wild and domestic fowl, and a good deal of kelp is gathered from the shores of all the islands. A bare and uninhabited rock, called the Scilly, gives the peeps to this cluster of islands.

CARLISLE, is a border town between England and Scotland, seated at the extreme corner of the County of Cumberland, of which it is the capital town. It stands on rising ground, in what was a forest, and at the confluence of the rivers Caldew and Eden. It is 3044 miles N.N.W. from London. Its origin is unknown; or, at least, wrapped in obscurity; but it is supposed to be of the same antiquity as Severus's wall, and, indeed, to have been a fortress to that rampart. That it was a Roman station there is no doubt, from the number of Roman antiquities found in it. And even after the ravages committed by the Picts and Scots, on the Romans quitting England, it still remained a city. They devastated it and the surrounding country, and so it remained till Egfrid, king of Northumberland, ordered it to be rebuilt and fortified. He afterwards bestowed it on St. Cuthbert, the celebrated bishop of Lindisfarne, and it was then annexed to that see, and so continued till 1133, when Hen. I. made it a separate see. In the eighth and ninth centuries, Cumberland sustained its full share of the misfortunes of Danish invasion. These barbarians laid waste the greater part of the county, and utterly destroyed the city of Carlisle. It remained a mass of ruins for 200 years, when Walter, a priest, who followed William I. over from Normandy, repaired some of the habitations, and refounded a religious house that St. Cuthbert had founded there. William Rufus, on returning from Scotland, observing the great importance of Carlisle as a frontier town, gave orders for its restoration; and this work he entrusted to Walter, who quickly erected public buildings, a strong fortress, and a wall of circumvallation. From this time it became an important military station, and a curb to Scotch invaders. It was ceded to the Scotch king, David, by King Stephen, and was his place of retreat in 1138, after the battle of the standard. In 1173 it was again in possession of the English, and Malcolm, king of Scotland, besieged it without success. In the reign of King John, it was taken by Alexander, king of Scotland, but was repossessed by the English soon after. In 1296, the Scotch again besieged it, and burned the suburbs. In 1807, Edw. I. held a parliament here, in which some acts were passed to promote Edward's projected invasion of the Sootch. In the reign of Edw. II., it was be-sieged by Bruce, king of Scotland, but ineffectually. In 1358, it was again besieged by the Scotch, and a considerable part of it burned. In Aske's rebellion, in Henry VIII.th's time, it was besieged, but the garrison held out effectually. In the reign of Elizabeth it suffered much from the plague. In the civil wars it was besieged by the parliament forces, and taken with great difficulty; and, in 1745, it surrendered to the Pretender, being weakly garrisoned. Carlisle has not the appearance of an ancient town, if one considers the houses only. These have been so often destroyed or damaged, that new ones have been built, or repairs equalling new buildings have been necessary. The walls, and their towers, the three gates, English gate, Scotch gate, and Irish gate, the castle, and the cathedral, are the marks of its antiquity. It has three good streets, and is, besides, a pleasant and clean town. The castle still remains, and in good preservation. It consists of an outward and an inward ward, the walls of the former nine feet thick, those of the latter 17 feet thick : and within the latter is the tower, a square building, with walls of great thickness, and very lofty, and commanding an extensive view. The cathedral is handsome, and displays specimens of different styles of architecture, but, for the greater part, it is modern. handsomest part of the building is the choir, and that was begun by Bishop Welton, in the reign of Edward III. There is only one church (St. Cuthbert's) besides the cathedral. This city has received many charters at different times, that have been borned during the invasions it has suffered; and it is now governed under a charter granted as a confirmation of its claims, by a mayor, recorder, 12 aldermen, sheriff, 2 bailiffs, 2 coroners, 24 common councilmen, and inferior officers. It sends 2 members to parliament, and the right of election is in the freemen, of whom there are 750 voters. The manufacturing carried on at Carlisle is of muslin, calico, and calico printing; and also of soap, and some other things. In these a great many hands are employed. The population is 15,476. There are markets on Wednesdays and Saturdays, and the fairs are, Aug. 26, for horned cattle and linen, Sept. 19, for horses and horned cattle, first and second Saturday after Oct. 10, for Scotch horned cattle. Here there were, an Augustine Priory of Monks, and a Nunnery, founded in the year 686; were destroyed in the Danish wars, but rebuilt by William Rufus, and Walter, a Norman Income, 5311. 4s. 11d., now worth 10,6241. 18s. 4d. St. Nicholas Hospital, founded by the ancestors of Rich. I., for thirteen lepers; granted 33 Hen. VIII.

DERBYSHIRE.

AN INLAND COUNTY, bounded on the North by Yorkshire, on the East by Nottinghamshire, on the South by Leicestershire, and on the West by Staffordshire. It is about 50 miles long and 38 broad. It is divided into six hundreds; namely, Appletree, High-Peake, Morleston and Litchurch, Repton and Greeley, Scarsdale and Wirksworth. It has eight MARKET-TOWNS; Derby, Ashbourn, Bakewell, Chapel-inle-Frith, Chesterfield, Tideswell, Winster, and Wirksworth. Two members are returned to parliament for the county, and two for the borough of Derby. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, in the Diocese of LITCHFIELD and Co-VENTRY, and in the MIDLAND CIRCUIT. It contains 1036 square miles, or 656,640 acres, and 139 parishes. It had 13 monaștic institutions, and 66 public charities; it has 8 parishes with no church, 10 parishes, containing less than 100 people, 62 parishes with no parsonage-house, 36 parishes in which the parsonage-house is unfit to live in. The Poor-RATES of the county are 136,5411.12s.64d. the number of paupers is 14,939; the rental is 887,6591. 3s. 4d.; the POPU-LATION, in 1821, was 233,330; the number of houses is 40,054; the rates, compared with the rental, one-sixth; the paupers, compared with the number of houses, 1 to every 3 houses; the poor, rates, in 1776, were 16,770l.; the number of persons to a mile in this county is 227; the number of acres to a person, 2; the number of acres to a house, 16; the male population, 105,873; the number of families employed in agriculture, 14,582; the number of families employed in handicraft, 20,505; the number of other families, 7,317; the number of the agricultural male population, 38,772; the number of able labourers, 19,386, and the number of acres of land to each able labourer is 39. This county is very mountainous. There are mines of coal, lead, and iron in it of considerable importance, and of very old standing:—lead principally in the neighbourhoods of Castleton, Wirksworth, Matlock, and Winster; iron in Morley-Peak, near Heage, in Wingerworth, Chesterfield, and Staveley; coal, more or less, all over the county. The soil is principally a reddish clay in the low lands; but amongst the hills, and even on the tops of some of them, are peat-bogs of great extent. In the midland and southern parts of the county the sgriculture is about even pasture and tillage, dairy-farming being general; in the eastern parts, the land is chiefly in tillage, with the common rotation of crops. The cattle of the county are not particularly fine; the neat cattle bed milkers, but good for fatting; the sheep small.

DEVONSHIRE.

DEVONSHIRE is bounded on the North by the Irish sea, on the East by Somerset and Dorsetshire, on the South by the English channel, and on the West by Cornwell. It is 73 miles long, and 63 broad. It is divided into 31 hundreds, namely, Axminster, Bampton, Black-Torrington, Braunton, Budleigh, Cliston, Coleridge, Collyton, Crediton, Ermington, Exminster, Fremington, Halburton, Hartland, Hayridge, Haytor, Hemiock, Lyfton, South-Molton, St.-Mary-Ottery, Plympton, Roborough, Tavistock, Tawton and Wincklöy, Teignbridge, Tiverton, Withstridge, and Wonford. The rivers of this county are the Tamer, the Res, the Teen, the Lad, the Oke, the Teem, the Terridge, and the Dart. It has the city of Exeter, the boroughs of Ashburtan, Barnstable, Dartmouth, Honiton, Plymouth, Plympton, Okehampton, Tavistock, and Totness; and the market-towns of Axminster, Bampton, Bideford, Bow, Chumleigh, Chudleigh, Cellumpton, Crediton, Collyton, Devonport, Hartland, Hatherleigh, Holdsworthy, Kingsbridge, Modbury, Motecton, South-Molton, Newton - Abbota, Tiverton, Ottery St. Mary, Topahan, and Black-Torrington. The county sends a members to parliament; the city | of Exeter sends 2, as do also the 10 horoughs of Ashburton, Barnstable, Beerslaton, Dartmouth, Honiton, Plymouth, Plympton, Okehampton, Tavistock, and Totness, making the number of members for the county 26. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, in the Diocess or Exerca, and it is in WESTERN CIRCUIT. It contains 2,579 square miles, or 1,650,560 acres, and 465 parishes. It had 98 monastic institutions, 53 public charities; it has 6 parishes with no church, 23 parishes containing less than 100 people, 80 parishes with no parsonage-house, 88 parishes in which the parsonage-house is unfit to live in; the poor-rates of the county are 507,5364.144.1§d., the number of paupers is $3,134, the rental is 1,897,5154. 6. 2d., the population in 1821 was 459,040, the number of houses is 71,486; the raths, compared with the rental, one-mixth; the paupers, com-pared with the number of houses, 1 to every 3 houses; the poor-rates in 1776 were 61,0271.; the number of persons to a mile in this county is 170; the number of acres to a person, 4; the number of acres to a house, 21; the male population, 208,229; the number of families employed in agriculture 37,037; the number of families employed in handicraft, 33,985; the number of other families, 19,692, the number of the agricultural male population, 58,257; the number of able labourers, 29,693, and the number of acres of land to each able labourer, 55. The soil of Devonshire is excellent in the south-eastern part of the county, producing fine corn and pasture, and having luxuriant orchards; the western parts of the county resemble the neighbouring one, Cornwall; the northern parts are generally sandy, and the midland parts are fenny, including a large tract called Dartmoor. The county is very hilly, in some places even mountainous; and the climate is remarkably mild and healthy. chief produce of the county is butter and older. The next cattle peculiar to this county are rather small, of a deepred colour, with a tip of white to the end of the tail. The cows give excellent milk, though not in so great a quantity. The sheep are of no distinct breed, but a mixture of horned and hornless, coarse-woolled and finehornless, woolled.

EXETER, is situated about 24 miles from the south-eastern border of Devonshire, 30 miles from Cornwall, 9 miles from the sea towards the south, 30 miles from the Bristol Channel, and 168 miles W.S.W. from London. Some assert, and some dispute the fact, that it is a place of great antiquity; that it was one of the settlements of the Britons before the invasion of the Romans, and was called Caer-Penhuelgoit. The Romens gave it the name of Isca-Danmoniorum. When the Saxons, under Cerdic, inclosed this within the territory of Wessex, they christened it Eren-cestre, and thence the present name. In the year 876, Alfred drove the Danes out of Exeter, by besieging them on land, and by blocksding the harbour at the same time. It was besieged again by the Danes 1003, taken and pillaged, besides other damage being done by fire. In later times, Exeter has been several times besieged, but only in times of domestic disturbance. The last of these was in the reign of Edward VI., and in the year 1549, when the whole county rose in rebellion against the changes in religion that were then making, called the "Reformation," and, marching to Exeter, they laid siege to it, and kept it up for 35 days, during which time the inhabitants became so ill off, as to be reduced to the necessity of eating horse-The besiegers were put down principally by Lord Russell, one of those who had received large grants of the property stolen by the "Reformers," and the besieged were, in consequence of their resistance, endowed by the King with the whole of the manor of Exisland. The cathedral of Exeter is the most remarkable of the buildings in the town. It is described as " a noble memorial of the religious zeal of our Catholic ancestors." It is said to have been five hundred years in building, but it.seems more likely (at is also stated) that it was at first but a small church, and that, by degrees, it became the magnificent building that it now is. It is in many different styles of architecture, and it is therefore supposed, that many different architects were, from time to time, empleyed in it. Bishop Quivil, living in the year 1281, seems to have been the greatest contributor to this building. Besides the cathedral, there are now 15 churches within the city, and 4 in the suburbs. At the time of the "Reformation," against which the people of this county were so violent, there were many religious houses in this city. The precise number is not correctly known; but there were, a Nun-MERY, now the Dean's house; a Mo-NASTERY, founded by Ethelred, in the year 868, and a Monastray, founded in 932, by Ethelstan, and endowed with 26 parishes. Besides these 3, more particulars are known as to the following :-- A Benedictine Priory, founded by William the Conqueror. Yearly income, 145l. 12s., now worth 2,912l.; granted by Hen. VIII., to Sir Thomas Demys." Boneville's Hospital, founded in 1407, by Sir William Boneville, for 12 poor people, with 50 marks per annum. Granted to — Newton, Esq. St. Mary Magdalene Hospital. Granted sway by Hen. VIII. A Dominican Friary, on the north side of the eathedral. Granted, by Edw. VI., to John Lord Russell. A Franciscan Friary, founded in the reign of Edw. I.: granted to Humphrey Rolles." The situation of the town of Exeter is com-manding and pleasant. It stands on an eminence on the eastern bank of the river Exe, which flows in a semicircular direction round the south-west side of There are still some ruins of the ancient Saxon building called Rougemont-Castle, and from the ramparts of this there is an extensive view over the country, including the city, the river Exe and harbour, Torbay, the northeast coast, towards Sidmouth and Lyme, beside a fertile and rich tract of country. The streets and houses have the appearance of considerable antiquity, though there are many handsome modern build-ings. The city is governed by a mayor, 24 aldermen, a recorder, chamberlain, town-clerk, sheriff, and 4 stewards, besides inferior officers. It sends 2 members to parliament; the right of election being in the magistrates and freemen, and there being about 1200 of these altogether. The whole population of the city, 18,896. It contains 19 perishes, namely: Allhallows-on-the-Walls, Allhallows, Goldsmith-street, St. David, St. Edmund-on-the-Bridge, St. George, St. John. St. Kerrican, St. Lawrence, St. Martin, St. Mary-Arches, St. Mary-Major, St. Mary-Stepps, St. Olave, St. Pancras, St. Paul, St. Peterock, St. Seidwell, St. Stephen, Holy-Trinity. It is a port of considerable trade with Spain, Portugal, and Germany, to which it sends woollens in great abundance. Market, Wed., Fri., Sat.; fairs, Ash-Wed., Whit-Mon., Aug. 1; if the 1st Aug. fall on Sun. or Mon., it is kept on Tues.; Dec. 6, horned cattle, horses, and almost every commodity.

PULLY OF AND PULL ON A STORY OF A

DORSETSHIRE.

This Country is bounded on the North by Wiltshire and Somerectshire, on the East by Hempshire, on the South by the English Channel, and on the West by Devogabire; being about 50 miles long and 27 broad. It is divided into five great divisions, of Blandford, Bridport, Dorchester, Shaston, and Sherborne; and these are again divided into numerous liberties and hundreds. The principal Rivers are, the Stour, the Frome, and the Ivel. It has 19 Market-Towns; the Ivel. namely, Cranboerne, Dorchester, Poole, Lyme-Regis, Melcombe-Regis, Wevmouth, Bridport, Shaftesbury, Corfe-Castle, Wareham, Abbotsbury, Bea-Castle, minster, Bere-Regis, Blandford, Cerne-Abbas, Sherborne, Stalbridge, Sterminster-Newton, and Wimborne-Minster. The County sends two members to perhisment, as does each of the nine boroughs; namely, Dorchester, Poole, Lyme-Regia, Weymouth, Briuport, Shaftesbury, Corfe-Castle, Wareham, and Melcombe-Regis. It is in the Pro-VINCE OF CANTERBURY, in the Diocese or Briston, and in the WESTERN CIR-CULT. There are in this county 1,005 square miles, or 643,200 acres, and 271 parishes. It had 25 monastic institu-tions, 32 public charities; it has 3 parishes with no church; 33 parishes containing less than 100 people; 33 parishes with no parsonage-house; 71 parishes in which the parsonage-house is unit to live in. The Popz-RATES of the county are 129,221%. 11s. 04d., the number of Paupers is 15,684; the rental is 698,3951. 10s. 3d.; the population in 1821 was 144,499; the number of houses is $5,926; the rates compared with the rental, are one-fifth; the paupers, compared with the number of houses, are 1 to every 2 houses; the poor-rates in 1776, were 24,0451.; the number of persons to a mile in this county is 143; the number of acres to a person, 4; the number of acres to a house, 24; the male population, 68,934; the number of families employed in agriculture, 14,821; the number of families employed in handicraft, 10,811; the number of other families, 4,680; the number of the agricultural male population, 33,705; the number of able labourers, 16,852;

and the number of acres of kind to each able labourer, is 38. This county is in a great part level. It has some high lands on the North, dividing it from Somersetshire, and it has also a ridge of downs extending from East to West along the coast, from about Encombe to Lyme-Regis; and then it has a few high hills about Blandford, near the middle of the county. Excepting these Dorsetshire may be called a level county. The greater part of the county is in pasture, the arable being estimated at only one-third, and the waste at a ninth. The greater part of the waste is in that district between Corfe-Castle and the border of Hampshire, extending along the sea-coast. The soil is in some places, about Bridport and Sherborne for instance, a good deep loans; in others, as all along the Western district, it is light, if not sandy. Corn, sheep, butter, wool, timber and flak, are the products of the county. The Dorset sheep have been particularly famous in the West of England for years, both for the fineness of their wool, and for the earliness of their lambs, which come much earlier than also other.

DURHAM.

BOUNDED, on the North, by Northumberland; on the East, by the German Ocean; on the South, by the river Tees, which divides it from Yorkshire; and on the West, by Cumberland and Westmorland. It is 35 miles long, and 34 miles broad. Its principal RIVERS are, the Tess, the Wear, and the Tyne. It is divided into four wards; Chester, Darlington, Easington, and Stockton; with the two districts of Norhamshire and Islandshire. There are 11 market-towns; namely, Durham, Darlington, Gateshead, Stockton, Sunderland, Hartlepool, Bishop - Auckland, Barnard - Castle, Sedgefield, Wolsingham, and Yarm. The county sends 2 members to parliament, and the city sends 2. It is in the Pro-VINCE OF YORK, in the Drocese of Dur-HAM, and in the Northern Circuit. It contains 1,061 square miles, or 679,040 acres; and 75 parishes. It had 14 momastic establishments, and 22 public charities; it has 1 parish with no church, 4 parishes containing less than a hundred cople; 23 parishes with no parsonagehouse; 17 parishes in which the parsonage-house is unfit to live in. POOR-RATES of the county are 105,9971.
11s. 3d., the number of PAUPERS is 13,628; the rental is 791,359l. 7s. 9d.; the population in 1821 was 207,673; the number of houses is 32,793; the rates, compared with the rental, is one-seventh; the paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 3 houses; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 14,057l.;

the number of persons to a mile in this county is 195; the number of acres to a person, 3; the number of scres to a house, 30; the male population, 99,100; the number of families employed in wriculture, 9,427; the number of families employed in handicraft, 20,212; number of other families, 16,301; the number of the agricultural male population, 20,335; the number of able labourers, 10,167; and the number of acres of land to each able labourer, is 61. Durham is in general hilly, but particularly the Western angle of it, which comprises a range of barren, bleak hills, called the English Apennines. The rest of the county, though hilly, has immense numbers of beautiful and fertile vallies in every direction. The soil is generally of a clayey nature, or that and gravel. It is but little wooded except where gentlemen have planted for ornament. natural productions of the county are, coals, lead, and iron. The East and North-East parts of the county have been long famous for their immense produce of coals, which, in a very great measure, supply London, besides all the supply afforded to the county of Durham itself. The lead and ironmines are about Teesdale, and Weardale. In agriculture, the Eastern part of the county affords abundance of the common crops of corn; and, towards the West, is that grazing country which produces the large and fine Tees-water breed of sheep, and the famous Dur-

then the astonishing specimens in London. These animals are famous as well for their propensity to give milk as to become fat, and they are therefore greatly esteemed by the milk-men of London. Durham has been from time immemorial a county palatine belonging to the bishop of the see. Blackstone and other law writers say that it was so before the time of William the Conqueror; for no charter can be found of its creation. It exercised all the liberties of a palatinate until the making of the Act 27 Hen. VIII., which abridged some of the liberties of the counties palatine; but it still enjoys the greater part: the act only taking away the power to pardon criminals, that of appointing justices in Eyre, of assise and of the peace; and that of issuing writs in any but the king's name. The bishop still sits as a judge of assize if he like; he has still his chancellor, his anes and forfeitures, his right of granting charters or fairs or markets, his right of the custody of idiots and lunatics, besides a very-littlelimited admiralty jurisdiction with its revenues of forfeitures, wrecks, duties on ships coming into ports, anchorage, wharfage, beaconage, moorage, butterage, ulnage, &c.

- The city of DURHAM is distant 2594 miles from London. It is seated on a memarkably rocky eminence which rises near the middle of the county, and is imost surrounded by the river Weer. The approach to the city is so beautiful, owing to the natural pleasingness of the scenery, as well as to the addition of beautiful buildings, that it has given it the appellation of the English Zion. The early history of the city must be traced through the legendary history of St. CUTHBERT, who, dying at Lindisfarne, then a see, in the year 687, was buried there, and there his body lay some time; but in 876, Halfden, the Dane, coming over into this district. put the then Bishop of Lindisfarne and the Abbot in such consternation for the security of the saint's relics and themselves, that they determined to depart, with their whole fraternity of religious, and bear the bones of the Saint away with them to some place of greater security. After loitering some time in different fastnesses within the county, after endeavouring to get privately to Ireland, and after remaining some time at Chester-le-Street, and at Ripon, and at Wardelaw, they came to a "place strong by nature, though not easily rendered habitable, in the midst of a thick forest." Here they determined to fix the abode of themselves and the Saint: here they began by erecting a wicker tabernacle, called the Bough-Church, and in it they placed the relics in the year 995. And thus arose the city of Durham. But it seems to have remained unnoticed till about the eleventh century, when it became a favourite place of attack for barbarians out of Scotland. William I., in 1069, sent his armies against, and desolated it and the neighbouring country considerably. The cathedral was begun by Bishop William de Carilepho, in 1093; and he is said to have made the monks labour at it daily with their own hands, His successor, except at meal-times. Ralph Flambard, who was bishop twenty years, finished the building nearly to the roof, and he removed the remains of St. Cuthbert into this new building; and it is said to have been completed by Richard de Hotoun, about 1289. The cathedral new presents to the view a singular combination of the different styles of architecture, particularly in the inside, where the repairs carried on by command of Cardinal Langley, while bishop of Durham, are the most various in style that can be imagined. Durham contains six churches, besides the cathedral; but it does not appear that there ever were any religous houses here, except the ancient Benedictine Priory attached to the Cathedral. The city was anciently under the control of a bailiff, who was appointed by the bishop; but later bishops have granted and confirmed charters of incorporation, and now it is under the management of a mayor, 12 aldermen, and 24 common councilmen. The population in 1821 was 10,372. Its parishes are, St. Giles Gilligate, St. Mary-le-Bow, Little St. Mary, St. Nicholas, St. Oswald. It returns 2 members to parliament; the right of election being in the mayor, aldermen, and freemen, and there are about 1,000 electors. Durham has no commerce with other places of any consequence, and no manufactories. Market on Sat.; fairs, March 31, three days; first day, horned cattle; second day, sheep and hogs; third day, horses. Whit-Tuesday, Sept. 15, the same.

ESSEX.

Estax is bounded on the North by Suffolk and part of Cambridgeshire, on the East by the German Ocean, on the South by Kent, on the West by Hertford and Middlesex. It is 46 miles long and 40 broad. It is divided into 19 handreds; namely, Barnstaple, Becontree, Chafford, Chelmsford, Clavering, Dangie, Dunmow, Freshwell, Harlow, Hinckford, Laxden, Ongar, Rochford, Tendring, Thurstable, Uttlesford, Waltham, Winstree, and Witham, and the liberty of Havering. Its principal RIVERS are the Thames, the Stour, the Coln, the Bluckwater, and the Chelmer. There are 19 market-towns; Barking, Billericay, Braintree, Chipping-Ongar, Colchester, Chelmsford, Coggeshall, Dunmow, Epping, Grays, Halsted, Harwich, Maldon, Manningtree, Rochford, Rumford, Walden, Waltham, and Witham. The county sends two members to par-liament; and the boroughs of Col-chester, Harwich, and Maldon, send two each. In this county are 1532 parishes with no church, 20 parishes containing less than 100 people, 53 parishes with no parsonage-house, 74 parishes in which the parsonage-house parishes in which the Poor-Rates of.

the county are $71,1991. Oc. 74d., the number of PAUPERS is 34,425; the rental is 1,556,8361. 2s. 5d.; the POPU-LATION, in 1821, was 289,425; the number of houses is 49,978; the rates, compared with the rental, one-fourth; the paupers, compared with the numbers of houses, is 1 to every 9 houses; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 72,568/; the number of persons to a mile in this county is 188; the number of acres to a person, 3; the number of acres to a house, 19; the male population, 144,909; the number of families employed in agriculture, 33,206; the number of fairnities employed in handicraft, 17,160; the number of other families, 9,263; the number of the agricultural male population, 85,442; the number of able labourers, 47,221, and the number of acres of land to each able labourer is 35. It is in the Province of Canter-BURY, chiefly in the Drocese or London, but partly in that of CANTERBURY; and it is included in the Home Cincuir. Essex is proverbially unhealthy, but it is only that part which borders on the Thames or lies along the Southern coast which is so in reality. There the salt marshes are considerable, and intermitting fevers are sometimes very destructive. The characteristic of the county is flatness, and a want of words.

The soil is for the greeter part a good atrong black mould; there is some bog land, and, to the North West, some chalk. The produce of the county is chiefly, the three prevailing corn crops, wheat, barley, and oats; but near to London, a great quantity of vegetables for the supply of Covent-Garden market is grown. In pasturage, Essex is very famous, not used so muck for the fatting of sheep or oxen as of calves, of which it is said to send more to the London markets than any other county. The dairies are not numerous except about Epping, where there are some that have obtained celebrity for their butter. There is little or no manufacturing carried on in this county, if we except a little making of baize carried on at Colchester; but its ports are numerous, though small, and they, together with its vicinity to London and its good and completely level roads, rive it an advantage in the conveyance of its produce possessed by no other county.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

ANINEAND COUNTY, bounded on the North by Worcestershire and Warwickshire; on the East by Warwicksbire, Oxfordshire, and Wiltshire; on the South by Somersetshire, and on the West by the Severn, by Monmouthshire, and Here-It is 65 miles long, and 25 fordshire, broad. It is divided into 27 hundreds; namely; Berkeley, Bisley, Blidesloe, Botloe, Bradley, St. Briavells, Bright-well, Barrow, Cheltenham, Cleeve, Crowthorn, Deerhurst, Dudstone and Kingsbarton, Grimbalds Ash, Henbury Kirtigate, Duchy of Lancaster, Langley and Swineshead, Longtrees, Puckle-Church, Rapagate, Slaughter, Tewkeshery, Thornbury, Tibaldstone, Westbury, Westminster, and Whitestone. The principal RIVERS of this county are, the Frome, the Isis, the Severn, and the Wye. It has one city (Gloucester), two boroughs (Cirencester and Tewkesbury), and 23 Market-Towns; namely, Berkeley, Campden, Cheltenham, Colford Dean, Dursley, Fairford, Horsley, Lechlade, Marshfield, Minchinhampton, Morton-in-Marsh, Newent, Newnham, Northleach, Painswick, Sodbury, Stowe, Stroud, Tetbury, Thornbury, Wickwar, Winchcomb, and Wootton under-Edge. The County returns 2 members to parliament, and the boroughs of Tewkesbury and Circucester send 2 each. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, chiefly in the DIOCESE OF GLOUCESTER, but partly in that of BRISTOL; and it is in the Oxford Circuit. This County contains 1,256 square miles, or 803,840 seres; and 389 parishes. It had 22 monestic institutions, 71 public charities; it has now 4 parishes with no church, 34 parishes containing less than 100 people, 72 parishes with no parsonage-bouse, 61 parishes in which the parsonage-house is unfit to live in; the Poon-RATES of the county are 220,1431.15s.8d., the number of Pavenes is $6,678, the rental is 1,463,2594. 11s. 8d., the population in 1821 was 335,843, the number of houses is 60,881; the rates, compared with the rental, one-sixth; the paupers, compared with the number of houses, 1 to every S houses; the poor-rates in 1776 were 52,873l.; the number of persons to a mile in this county is 267; the number of acres to a person, 2; the number of acres to a house, 13; the male population, 160,451; the number of families employed in agriculture, 23,170; the number of families employed in handieraft, 35,907; the number of other families, 13,709; the number of the agricultural male popula-tion, 47,078; the number of able labourers, £3,539, and the number of scres of land to each able labourer, 34. Glou-costerahire is a mixture of hill, wale, and forest; and of open, and enclosed, land. The high, or hill, district is that known by the names of the Cotswold, and the Streudwater kills. These hills are very high, bleak, and almost unenclosed, having scarcely any enclosures but stone walls, and these enclosures being very large. The soil of these hills is a chalky loam, mixed with yellow stone or shrave. The farms here are large, the corn grown is wheat, barley, and oats; but the great produce is sheep, which are of a peculiar breed, and in great abundance. The vale district, is that tract of low land which runs along by the side of the Severn, and it is divided into three by these appellations, the Vale of Berkeley, of Evesham, and Gloucester. These vales are rich in corn, in fruit, and in cattle; the latter being grazed in the richest of pastures, and producing fat car-cases, and excellent butter and cheese, in which latter article the county carries on a considerable trade. The woodland district is that called the Forest of Dean; but, besides this forest, which was formerly much more extensive than it is now, there is, in the Western district of the county, a good deal of private property in woodland. There is lead ore in some parts of the county, but not in sufficient quantity to tempt the proprietors of the land to open mines. Coal is found of good quality, and in great store, in the Forest of Dean, and the neighbouring country is supplied thence with fuel. In the mannfacture of cloth, Gloucestershire has long been

GLOUCESTER is situated in the Vale of Gloucester, on a rising ground on the east side of the Severn. It is 1044 miles W.N.W. from London. It is said to have been a fair city under the ancient Britons, and to have been a favourite post of the Romans till the time of their quitting the island. The number of Roman soins and other things found immediately in the neighbourhood of Gloucester corroborate this latter. It seems to have been surrendered to the West Saxons about the year 577, and to have been greatly indebted to Wolphene, who, in 679, greatly enlarged and adorned it. It then became the residence of several successive Saxon kings; suffered considerably from the ravages of the Danes, and was subsequently a place of residence of Wil-ham I.; of Rufus, in 1037. Henry I. held his court at Gloucester in 1125; and it is certain that, in the reign of Edward I., a parliament was held at Gloncester, at which the acts called the Statutes of Gloucester were passed. It has been said, that Christianity was first promulgated in this city, in the year 189, by a bishop chosen by Lucius, first Christian king of the island. This is not sufficiently authenticated, but it seems to have become christian very early. In 679 it formed a part of the see of Lichfield, and was not a see of itself till made so by Hen. VIII. The present cathedral is said to have been greatly augmented and adorned by the Abbot Gamages, in the 14th century, who removed the body of Edward II. from Berkeley-Castle after he had been murdered there, and raised money enough from the offerings of the numerous visitants to the body to repair and rebuild the cathedral, which was originally the church belonging to a monastery of Benedictine Monks called St. Peters, and of which Gamages was the Abbot. In it are many curious and interesting specimens of Saxon, Norman, and English architecture. There were formerly, besides the cathedral, eleven churches in the city and suburbs, but six only are now standing. Before the devastation of the church, in the reign of Hen. VIII., there were in this city the following five religious houses; namely, the "Benedictine Abbey, to which the present cathedral belonged, and which, together with its revenues then 1,550l. per annum, now worth 31,004l.), were granted to the Bishop and his officers. An Augustine Monastery, in the year 660, worth then 901. 10s. now worth 1,810l., and granted, by Hen. VIII., to John Jennings. A Friary, near the Southgate, founded by Lord Berkeley; granted to John Jennings. A Monastery of Dominicans, founded by Hen. III., near the Castleyard, in 1239; granted, by Hen. VIII., to Thomas Bell. A Carmelite Friary, by Queen Elenor, Sir Thomas Gifford, and Sir Thomas Berkeley, in the suburbs, in the time of Henry III.; granted by Hen. VIII., to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple." The walls of Gloucester remained in a dilapidated state till about the restoration, when they were completely demolished, leaving only the west gute, which still remains. The ancient castle remained a complete ruin till within these few years, when it was taken down to make room for a county jail. The streets of Gloucester are sufficiently spacious, the houses well-built, and the town generally well-paved and lighted. Its trade it owes principally to its close vicinity to the Severn. It has no manufactories except of pins, and this is carried on to a very great extent. Its population is (including that part of the parishes of St. Catherine, St.-Mary-de-Lode, and St. Michael, which are without the city) 11,585. It contains the ten parishes of St. Aldate, St. Catherine, St.-John-the-Baptist, St.-Mary-de-Crypt, St.-Maryde-Grace, St.-Mary-de-Lode, St. Michael, St. Nicholas, St. Owen, and Holy-

- Trinity. It is under the control of a mayor, twelve aldermen, a high steward, a recorder, a town-clerk, two sheriffs, and a common council. It sends two members to parliament, the right of election being in the inhabitants and freemen, of which there are about 3000. There is a market on Wednesday and on Saturday, and the fairs are, April 5, for cheese; July 5, Sept. 28, and Nov. 28, for cattle, pigs, horses, and cheese.

HAMPSHIRE

Is bounded on the North by Berkshire, on the East by Surrey and Sussex, on the South by the English Channel, and on the West by Dersetshire and Wiltshire. It is about 42 miles long, and 38 broad. It is divided into 10 divi-sions; Alton (North and South); And-over, Basingstoke, Fawley, Kingsclere, New-Forest (East and West), Ports-down, and the Isle-of-Wight. These are again divided into 39 small hundreds. The rivers are, the Anton, Avon, Boldre-Water, Exe, Itchin, and the Tese or Test. The market-towns are, Alresford, Alton, Andover, Basingstoke, Bishops-Waltham, Botley, Christchurch, Pareham, Fordingbridge, Gospert, Havant, Kingsclere, Lymington, Odiham, Petersfield, Portsmouth, Ringwood, Romsey, Southampton, Stockhridge, Winchester, Whitchurch; and Newport, Newton, Yarmouth, and Brading, in the Isle of Wight. The county returns 26 members to parliament: that is, 2 for the county, and the same for the city of Winchester, and for each of the towns of Southampton, Portamouth, Petersfield, Stockbridge, Christchurch, Lymington, Whitchurch, and Andover; and two each for the boroughs of Newtown, Newport, and Yarmouth, in the late of Wight. This county has 1,628 square miles, or 1,041,920 acres, and .. 298 parishes. It had 29 monastic estublishments, and 36 public charities. Of the parishes which this county contains, 11 have no churches at all; there are 28 parishes which have less than 100 inhabitants; 45 have no parsonagehouses, and there are 53 the parsonagehouses of which the incumbents, in a return made to parliament in 1818, represent as being unfit for them to live The poor-rates were, in 1818, 265,6241. 7s. 93d.; the number of paupers, 23,487; the rental of all the landed preperty of the county, according to a return made to perliament in 1818, was, 1,130,951l. 1Ss. 34d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 283,298; the number of inhabited houses, in 1821 was 49,516; the number of uninhabited houses at the same period was 1,943;

the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-fourth of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 2 houses; the poor-rates in 1776 were only 48,5981.; the number of persons to every aquare mile of this county is 175; the number of acres to a person, 3; the number of acres to a house, 21. The male population, in 1821, was 138,373; the families employed in agriculture were in number 24,303; the families employed in trade or handicraft were 19,810 in number; the number of other families was 13,829; the agricultural male population 69,672; able labourers 34,836; the number of scres in this county to every able-hodied labourer is 27. It is in the Province of Canter-BURY, in the DIOCRER OF WINGHESTER, and in the WESTERN CIRCUIT. Hampshire consists of two very distinct species of country, the one up-land, being for the greater part chalk, or of a thin, light soil, covered with flints, and bearing large crops of wheat and other grain, and feeding large and fine fleeks of sheep; and the other of low-land of a strong clay, or strong mould mixed with gravel, and growing good wheat, and excellent timber in great plenty. A no inconsiderable art of the county is taken up in the New-Forest, and the forests of Bere, of Alice-Holt, and Woolmer; the 2 former on the southern extremity of the county, and the 2 latter just on the western border of it. There are several very extensive wastes in Hampshire, being estimated altogether at not less than 90,000 acres. There are also downs of very considerable extent in many parts of the county, lying high and supporting large flocks of sheep, which are generally either of the Southdown or Dorset breeds. Indeed, Hampshire contains some of the qualities of almost every other county, high-land and low-land, common fields, large enclosures, and small enclosures; barren land and very fertile land; open country and extremely wooded country; downs, heaths, and moors, forests, and chases; bleak and uninteresting countries to the eye, and some spots which are of unrivalled beauty:-all these it has, besides being in some parts very hilly, and in others very level. It wants only mines and manufactories to make it a complete epitome of England. The produce of this county is chiefly wood, in all its shapes, and corn. There are some hops about Alton, but the produce is not considerable enough to make much mention of. The cattle are of a mixed breed; great numbers of cows and oxen coming up from Devonshire, and numbers of cows coming over annually from Normandy, and the islands of Guernsey and Jersey. The sheep are mentioned above. The Hampshire hog is farfamed: it is a large, loose-limbed, blackspotted, lop-eared animal; hardy, prone to fat, and very prolific. The real horses of Hampshire are a small bread of foresters that are found in the New-Forest, and in the forest of Bere, and Waltham Chase—very useful and pretty animals. The Isle-of-Wight, an island standing in the British Channel, opposite to the coast of Hampshire, at about 7 miles distance from it, is considered a part of the county. It is about 23 miles in length, and 13 in breadth, and consists, for the most part, of a good and fertile chalky soil.

- WIGHT (The Isle of). This fertile and beautiful island forms a part of the county of Hants, standing in the British Channel, and at about 7 miles from the Hampshire coast. From East to West it is in length about 23 miles, and from North to South, about 13 in breadth. It contains about 100,000 square acres. It contains the 2 hundreds of Mede and Medam, and in all 30 parishes. The population of the island is given under its respective parishes; but it is as well to state here that the whole amounts to $4,120 souls. Its principal Towns are Newport, Breding, Yarmouth, Newton, and Cowes; Newport and Newton being borough towns. The Southern part of the island is hilly, affording excellent pasturage for sheep, the Northern half is a slope towards the coast of Hunts, and is cultivated land. The soil is various; but that of the Northern part consists chiefly of a good loam, strong rather than otherwise; and here the produce in grain crops is very great, reckoned to be 7 or 8 times the quantity necessary for the inhabitants of the island. Dorset sheep are those Devonshire cows. The farma are not large, are chiefly cultivated by their owners, who have always been characterized by smiable manners and great hospitality.

MCHESTER. This city lies 114 miles N.N.E. from Southampton, and WINCHESTER. 621 miles S.W. by W. from London. It is seated on the Eastern declivity of a hill, gradually sloping to the river Itchen, the chalky cliffs of which, together with the whiteness of the surrounding soil, are said, by some, to have given the name of Caer Gwent (White City) to this town, in the time of the Britons. Winchester is one of the most ancient of the cities of England, and was for many ages one of the most important, if not the most important. Passing by all the accounts which make it little interior in antiquity to Troy, we may rest upon Dr. Milner's account of its origin. He says, in his History of Winchester, "It is clear, both from argument and authority, that South Britain, at least, was first peopled from the opposite coast of Gaul, and particularly from the Armorican coast of the Celtic Gauls, whom, in language, manners, and religion, they so much resembled; that the Southern coast of the same was first inhabited, and that thence population gradually spread itself into other parts of the country. This being so, and the relative situation of the twenty-eight original British cities considered, we can have no difficulty in pronouncing that the first Celtic settlers, embarking at the nearest Armorican port to Britain, that of the Unelli, or Cherburg, from the vicinity of which they must often have seen the white cliffs of the Isle of Wight, landed, and established themselves at Caer Peris, or Porchester, the only ancient city which is actually on this coast. Thence, preceeding up the country in a North-West direction, they could not overlook that beautiful and commodious spot, which possessed the several advantages within itself, or close to it, of a well-watered valley, and of fertile fields, for their own support, and that of their valuable flocks, of extensive downs interspersed with covers proper for the chase; and of shady forests necessary for defence, and for the mysterious rights of the Druidical religion: here then they made their chief settlement on the Southern coast." The Celtic Britons being dispossessed by the Belgæ, these were ousted by the Romans under Vespusion; and, about the year 50 Winchester, with other towns, was regularly fortified in the Roman manner, a part of which fortification still remains. is supposed to have been the winter quarters of the Roman Legions stationed here, and, by the entrenchments on Catherine Hill, within a mile of the city, that is supposed to have been the summer quarters. On the Romans quitting the island, the Britons again possessed this country, and electing Vortigern their head, he made Winchester the metropolis of the kingdom, about the year 449. It then, upon the invasion of Ceodic, and his complete overthrow of the Britons, became the metropolitan city of the Sazons in about the year 495, and it now received the name of Wintonceaster or Winchester. In 635, St. Birinus converted the West Saxon king to Christianity, who began shortly afterwards to collect materials for building a cathedral, which was not finished tili his son and successor was crowned and also converted to Christianity, when it was dedicated to St. Paul and St. Peter, in 648. From this time, to the year 854, and in the reign of Egbert, nothing of importance is noted, but then, upon the union of the Saxon kingdoms, this town became the metropolis of the whole island; its trade increased prodigious-ly, and the principal inhabitants formed a guild under the protection of the king. About 871 the Danes invaded this coast in great bodies, ravaged the country and took and despoiled Winchester; and it owed its restoration to Alfred the Great, who, after he had expelled the Danes, made Winchester his capital city, erected a Monastery for his chaplain, St. Grimbald, and was himself buried here, in the year 900. In the reign of Athelstan, there were no less than six mints at Winchester, a larger number than in any other town, and therefore, a clear proof of its superior importance. In the reign of Edgar, in 963, the city of Winchester was made the depository for the standard measures, and this was the origin of the Winchester measure. St. Ethelwold, a native of Winchester, and Bishop of the see under Edgar, caused a great deal to be done in augmenting the cathedral in the year 960. On the invasion of the Danes, in 1013, Swayne, one of the leaders, summoned and entered Winchester. Canute, about 1017, being sovereign of the whole island, made Winehester his capital; and on the restoration of the Saxon line, in Edward the Confessor, that Prince was crowned at Winchester. William the First, who succeeded in about 1066, made Winchester a principal royal residence; he built a castle and held some important trials there; but London had now risen to great importance, and was fast becoming the metropolitan city. In 1079, Bishop Walkelin, a cousin of William, began re-building the cathedral which had been almost demolished in the turbulent times of the Danes; and he obtained leave to cut timber for the purpose in Hempage wood, about three miles northward of the city. He completed a handsome building in the year 1093. William Rufus lived here; and, on his death, his brother Henry also, when not in Normandy, made Winchester a principal residence; and, in the year 1125, all the coiners of the kingdom being suspected of debasing the coin that they issued, were summoned to appear at the Exchequer at Winchester, to answer the charge. See Dr. Lingard's History of England, vol. I., page 520. In 1141, Henry being dead, and his brother Stephen having usurped the throne, Henry's daughter, Matilda (who, having married the Emperor of Germany, was already an Empress), came over to claim the crown of England; and, having been first received in, and then driven out of London, she besieged Winchester, and, in the conflict between her troops and those of Stephen, the city was partly demo-lished. It is said (see Lingard, vol. II., p. 24), that no less than forty churches were burned down, besides two monasteries, that of St. Mary and that of St. Grimbald; and other writers affirm, that the whole suburbs of Hyde, and all the north part of the city, were completely burned or pulled down. The town has been a small place ever since. King John lived much at Winchester; grunted the city its charter of incorporation, and had a son, Henry, surnamed of Winchester, born here. This son, who succeeded his father in 1216, lived in and held parliaments in Winchester; and in the reign of his son Edward I., the famous Statutes of Winchester were passed. From this time, however, it was more a place to visit than to reside in, till Charles II., having a wish to restore it, and having bought the remains of the castle, began to erect the spacious palace, which is now the soldiers barrack, and which his death caused to remain unfinished. Before the "Reformation" there were in Winchester nine religious houses, of which the following is a brief account. A Benedictine Priory, founded by King Lucius, frequently destroyed and rebuilt, but at length granted to the now Dean and Chapter, by Henry VIII. Value, at that time, 1,50 l. 17s. 2d.; value now, 30,1571. Ss. 4d. A Nunnery, founded in the east part of the city, by King Alfred. Valued at 1791. 7s. 2d. yearly; now worth 3,587 l. 3s. 4d. yearly; granted, by Hen. VIII., to John Bellew and John Broxholme. A Monastery, founded by King Alfred, to St. Grimbald; valued at 865%. 1s. 6d. yearly, yearly value now 17,3011. 0s. 10d.; granted, by Henry VIII., to Richard Bethel. St. Elizabeth's College, founded by John de Pontois, Bishop; valued at 1121. 17s. 4d. yearly, now worth 17,301l. 0s. 10d. yearly; granted, by Henry VIII., to Lord Wriothesley. Wykeham College, founded by William of Wykeham; valued at 6391. 8s. 7d., now worth yearly 12,7881. Saint Cross Hospital, founded by Henry le Blois, Bishop of Winchester, in 1132, for a number of poor men and women; value yearly 1844. 4s. 2d., yearly value now 3,6844. Ss. 4d. An Hospital for the poor folk stood outside the King's-gate, maintained by the Monks of Saint Swithen. An Augustine Friary stood a little without the South-gate, and its site was granted away by Henry VIII. A Grey Friary, founded by Henry III., stood close by the East-gate, on the inside; granted away by Henry VIII." The cathedral, which now stands, and a good description of which is given in Dr. Milner's excellent and learned "History of Winchester," was, as I have said above, begun by Bishop Walkelin. In the time of Edward III., the then Bishop Edyngton prepared for a thorough repairing of the cathedral; but he did not live to do much more than prepare for it, leaving it to his able and ex-cellent successor, William of Wykeham, to enlarge upon and complete the work. Dr. Lowth, in his life of WYERHAM, p. 209, mentions the projected repairs of Edyngton, and says, " however, Wykeham, upon due consideration and survey, found it either so decayed and infirm, or else so mean in its appearance, and so much below the dignity of one of the first episcopal sees of the kingdom, that he determined to take down the whole from the tower westward, and to rebuild it both in a stronger and more magnificent manner. This work he undertook in the year 1394." So that it was a rebuilding, and not a repairing, as his predecessor intended. In the same work Dr. Lowre, p. 210, says, that " the conditions stipulated between Wykeham and the Prior and convent, who acquit the bishop of all obligation to it, and acknowledge it as proceeding from his mere liberality and zeal for the honour of God: they agree to find the whole scaffolding necessary for the work; they give the bishop leave to dig and carry away chalk and sand from any of their lands, as he shall think most convenient; and they allow the materials of the old building to be applied to the use of the new." Common justice to the memory of this excellent man bids us dwell upon this fact, that the whole of his great undertaking was performed at his own expense, with the exception of the scaffolding, the clay and chalk, and the old materials, which the Prior and convent found him, or allowed him to help himself to. Winchester is now a clean, well-built country town, celebrated for its dulness, excepting at the fair and assize times. Its trade is nothing, saving what a central capital of a county must naturally have; and it has no manufactures. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, six aldermen, a townclerk, two coroners, two constables, and a council of twenty-four inhabitants. The corporation, in its present form, was established by Queen Elizabeth. It returns two members to parliament, and the right of election is in the corporation. It has a market on Wed. and Sat., and the fairs are held on the first Mon. in Lent, for bacon, cheese, leather, and horses; Oct. 24, leather, horses, bullocks, and sheep. It contains the parishes of St. Bartholomew, St. Lawrence, St.-Mary-Kalander, St. Maurice, St.-Peter-Colebrook, St. Thomas, St. Bartholomew, Hyde-Street, St. John, St. Michael, St. Peter-Cheenehill, Little-St.-Swithin and St. Faith, with the Hospital of St. Croix. The population is 7,739.

HEREFORD.

Ay Inland County, bounded by Shropshire on the North; on the East and North-East by Worcestershire; on the South-East by Gloucestershire; by Monmonthshire on the South-West; by Brecknockshire on the West, and by Radnorshire on the North-West. It is about 38 miles long, and about 35 It has 11 hundreds; namely, broad. Broxash, Ewyas-Lacy, Greytree, Grimsworth, Huntington, Radlow, Stretford, Weltree, Wigmore, Wolphy, Wormelow. The principal Rivers are, the Wye, the Munow, the Lug, the Ledden, the Team, the Arrows, and the Frome. The Market-Towns are Bromyard, Hereford, Kington, Ledbury, Ludlow, Leominster, and Ross. The county returns 2 members to parliament, and the boroughs of Leominster and Weobley each send 2. Ross, Ledbury, and Bromyard, anciently also sent representatives to parliament, but they voluntarily surrendered the privilege on account of the expense if put the electors to. Herefordshire is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, partly in the Diocess or Henerond, and a small part in the Diocese or Worcester; and it is in the Oxyone Cincuit. It contains 860 square miles, or 550,400 scres; and 219 parishes. It had 17 monastic establishments, and 31 public charities; of the parishes which this county contains, 4 have no churches at all; there are 25 which have each less than a hundred inhabitants; 46 have no parsonaga-houses; and there are 37 the parsonage-houses of which the incum-bents, in a return made to parliament in 1818, represent as being unfit to live in. The Poor-rates were, in 1818, 107,6891. 12s. 11d., the number of PAU-PERS 10,414; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 604,614/. 9s. 11d.; the population, according to a return made to parliament in 1821, was 103,243; the number of inhabited houses in 1821, was 20,061; the number of uninhabited houses at the same period was 804; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-fifth of the rental; the number of paupers compared with the number of houses is 1 to every 2 houses; the poor-rates, in the year 1776, were only 9,921/.; the number of persons to svery square mile of this county is 120; the number of acres to a person, 5 | the number of scres to a house, 27 male population in 1821, was 511552; the families employed in agriculture were 13,558 in number; the families employed in trade or handicraft were 5,633 in number; number of other population, $1,799; able-bodjed laljour-ers, 15,899; the number of ers, 15,899; the number of scres in this county, to every able-bodied labourer, is 34. This beautiful county is not mountainous, though it is far from being level. It is a continued series of knolls and dells, the former being sometimes hills, and the latter frequently valleys; in every part almost enclosed, and producing the best of every crop known to England; excellent and fast-growing timber, fine and abundant crops of corn, immense crops of apples and pears, and The produce never-failing pasture. then will of course be, wood, grain, cider and perry, and sheep and oxen; and it may with truth be said, that, of each and every one, it produces the very hest. The soil is various, as in other counties; but its general character is a mixture of marl and clay, containing calcareous earth. Underneath there is a good deal earth. Underneaus super a colour and of limestone, of different colour and quality in different districts, but very constant in the county. The hoped prevalent in the county. The homed cattle of Hereford have long been the most famous for grazing of any in England, and out of this county immense numbers are sent annually to be gre elsewhere, besides the number that grazed within the county either for its ownuse or for the Smithfield market. The Ryeland breed of sheep, bred chiefly in the southern part of the county, called the Ryelunds, are not in themselved so excellent as they have been made of late years by a judicious crossing of them. with the new Leicester breed, which has greatly added to their size and propensity to fatten. Herefordshire las neither mines nor manufactures worth notice.

MEREFORD, The city of, lies at the distance of 135 miles W.N.W. from London. It is immediately on the banks of the river Wye, and in a beautiful and fertile country. Its precise origin is, if not unknown, so wrapped in obscurity that it would be fruitless for me to give any of the suppositions concerning it, in a work professing to give a mere skeleton of its known history. In the year 676, a synod was held there at the conversion to Christianity of Peda, king of Mercia. It must then, therefore, have been a principal town. As early as the reign of Offa, it had a magnificent church, founded there by Offa in expistion of the murder of Ethelbert; and, at this time, it was a bishop's see. Under the West Saxons, it was a city of considerable commerce, and was fortified; having six city gates, namely Wye-bridge Gate (standing at the South end of the bridge), Friars Gate (situated on the South-West), Eigne Gate (on the West), Wide Marsh Gate (on the North), Bishops Gate (on the North-East), and St. Andrew's, since called St. Owen's (on the South-East). fortifications had fifteen embattled towers, and the whole circumference of the wall was 2350 yards. In the year 939, Athelstan here concluded his treaty with the Britons, in which he bound them to pay him an annual tribute. In the middle of the 11th century, Hereford was entered by the Welsh under Gryffyth, their king, who was aided by the Earl of Chester, a nobleman who was disgraced and banished the court by the king, Edward the Confessor. But they were driven back into Wales by Harold, the son of Earl Godwin, who returned to Hereford, and added to its fortifications. Although now a town of great importance, it is thought to have been but inconsiderable both in houses and population. Harold is said to have erected a castle, of which Leland says, "it standeth on the left side of the Wye, and a little beneath the riv bridge, and in strongly disabled whose not defended by the river; the walls of it be high and stronge, and full of great towers: it hath been one of the largest, fayrest, and strongest castles in England." King Stephen made the town, with its castle, and the whole county, the earldom of the then Earl of Leicester, whom he created Earl of Hereford; but it was very shortly after seized by Lord Talbot, one of the Empress Matilda's partisans, and she granted the Earldom to Mile, son of Walter, the Constable of England. Under him it resisted Stephen's forces for some time, till, in 1141, he besieged it in person with a large army, and took it. In the reign of Henry L, it be-came the earldom of Roger, the son of Milo. In that of Henry III., Leicaster, the head of the confederated barons, attacked and reduced Hereford, and destroyed a considerable part of it by fire; and here he kept Prince Edward in confinement previous to the escape of that prince and the battle of Evesham. Edward II. was deposed by a council assembled here in 1396, and the chief part of his friends were executed in the town. In 1643, and the two or three succeeding years, it was taken and retaken three times by the armies of the king and the parliament; and in 1645, it made so gallant a defence against the Scotch auxiliaries, that, at the restoration, it had a grant of a new charter, an augmentation of its arms, and the motto "Invicto Fidelitatia Premium." cathedral, which stands in a handsome space close to the beautiful river Wye, is a stately and ancient building. original founding of it is noticed above. Subsequently to that, Milfrid, viceroy of Mercia, made great grants to it, an pilgrims flocking to the shrine of Ethelbert also greatly enriched it by their donations. In 1012 it was so greatly decayed that the then bishop, Ethelstan, was obliged to rebuild it; and it was very shortly afterwards destroyed by fire by the Welsh. In the reign of William I. Lozenga, began the present edifice (in 1072) upon the model of the cathedral of Aix-la-Chapelle in Germany; but Lozenga died leaving it to his successor, Bishop Revealers, to finish. The revenues of the cathedral were, at the "reformation," estimated at 8311.4.1d.; in our money 16,6241.1s.8d. There were, besides this, the following religious houses in the city of Hereford. "A Benedictine Cell founded here very early in become of St. Cuthbert, valued | HUMBER, 5 miles S.E. from Leominster, at 1214. Sc. 35d. yearly; or in money of the present day, 2,4254. Sc. 10d., grant-ed, by Henry VIII., to John ap Rice." "St. John's Hospital of Templars, in the suburbs, without the North Gate, granted, 6th of Elizabeth, to Robert Freke and John Walker." "A Friary, founded in the time of Edward III., in the North suburbs, by Sir John Daniel; granted, 5 Elizabeth, to Elizabeth Wynne." "A Friary, founded without the Freregute, by Sir William Pembrugge, in the time of Edward I., granted, 36 Henry VIII., to James Boyle." There is a part of the city of Hereford, nearly a half of it, with part of the suburbs, which constitute what is called the Bishop's Fee, and over this part the bishop has, in right of very ancient custom, or charter, very considerable privileges. The corporation consists of a mayor, 6 aldermen, a comsoon council of 31, a chief steward, common clerk, prothonotary, a swordbearer, and 4 serjeants at mace. It sends 2 members to parliament, and the right of election is in the freemen. The principal manufacture of Hereford is gloves. There is a little fiannel also mufactured there, but not much. It contains the six parishes of All Saints, St. John the Beptist, St. Martin, St. Nicholas. St Owan, and St. Peter. The popula. is 9,136. Market, Wed., Fri., and Sat.; fairs, Tues. after Candlemas, Feb. 2, horned cattle, horses, and hops. Wed. in Easter-week, horned cattle and borses; May 19, a pleasure fair and toys; July 1, horned cattle, and wool; Oct. 20, horned cattle; cheese and Welsh butter, Dec. 7.

HERTFORDSHIRE.

AN INLAND COUNTY, bounded on the North by Bedfordshire and Cambridgeshire, on the East by Essex, on the South by Middlesex, and on the West by Buckinghamshire and Bedfordshire. It is about 36 miles long, and 16 broad. It is divided into the eight hundreds of Braughin, Broadwater, Cashio, Dacorum, Edwintree, Hertford, Hitchin and Picton, and Odsey. Its RIVERS are, the Lea, the Maran, the Rib, the Quin (these four form the New River, which supplies so large a part of London with water), the Coln, the Stort, and the Verlam. It has 16 Market-towns; namely, St. Albans, Baldock, Barnet, Berkhampstead, Bishop-Stortford, Hatfield, Hertford, Hitchen, Hoddesden, Rickmansworth, Royston, Standon, Stevenage, Tring, Ware, Watford. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, in the Dioceses of London and Lincoln, and it is in the Home Circuit. It sends 6 members to parliament; 2 for the county, and 2 for each of the boroughs, St. Albans and Hertford. Hertfordshire contains 528 square miles. or 337,920 acres; and 132 parishes. It has 20 monastic establishments, 29 public charities; it has 8 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants, 8 parishes with no parsonage-house, 33 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in; the POOR-RATES of this county were in 1818, 115,9201. 7s. 114d., the number of Paurens is 12,274, the rental of the county, by a return made to parliament in 1818, was 571,1071. 4s., the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 129,714; the number of inhabited houses in 1821 was 23,178; the number of uninhabited houses at the same epoch, 509; the poorrates are one-fourth of the rental. the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is one to two; the poor-rates in 1776 were 25,2411.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 245; the number of acres to a person, 2; the number of acres to a house, 14; the male population, in 1821, was 64,121;

the families employed in agriculture were in number 13,485; the families employed in handicraft were 7.39$ in number; the number of other families was 4,750; the agricultural male pepulation, 33,041; able labourers, 16,520; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer is 20. Hertfordshire has no considerable hills, nor has it any deep vales; it is, for the greater part, inclosed; and, if the woods are not extensive, they are numerous, besides the great quantity of wood grown in the hedge-rows. The northern part of the county is the most hilly, a range of hills extending from the neighbourhood of King's-Langley towards Berkhampstead and Tring. The most general soils of Hertfordshire are loam and clay, with, very frequently, a mixture of sand, and, as often of flints; but in the northern part of the county, a great deal of chalky land is found. Indeed, a considerable plant of the county has an under stratum of chalk. The produce is chiefly grain of the three principal kinds; wheat, barley, and oats; and, in the produce of these, it is esteemed little inferior to any county in England, good crops of turnips also are produced; and, in the neighbourhood of Rickmansworth, Sanet, Kings-Langley, Abbots-Langley, Flaunden, Bovington, and Watford, there are good and pro-ductive orchards. The cattle fattened here are principally those brought out of Wales, Devonshire, or Hereford-shire, and the sheep are, for the greater part, a breed between the Cotswold and the New Leicester; and, in many parts of the county, these are fed on oil cake. There are no mines in the county, and the manufacturing carried on is of the best possible kind; individuals menufacture cotton and silk, or straw gait. and dispose of it at the weekly markets for their own profit, and in these minufactures, a large part of the female population of many neighbourhoods field a good living.

HUNTING DONSHIRE.

An Inland County, bounded on the North by Northamptonshire; on the East, by Cambridgeshire; on the South, by Bedfordshire; and on the West, by Bedfordshire, and Northamptonshire. It is about 26 miles long and 20 broad. It is divided into four hundreds; Hustingstone, Leightonston, Norman-Cross, and Toseland. The Rivers are, the Nen, and the Ouse. It has 5 market towns; Huntingdon, St. Ives, Kimbolton, St. Neots, and Ramsey. Huntingdon sends 4 members to parliament; 2 for the county, and 2 for the town of Huntingdon. It is in the Province or

CANTERBURY, in the DIOCESE OF LINCOLN, and in the NORFOLK CIRCUIT. This county contains 370 square miles, or 256,800 acres, and 103 parishes. It had 8 monastic establishments, and 9 public charities. It has 1 parish with no church at all; 9 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants in sech; 10 parishes with no parsonage-house; 20 parishes with no parsonage-houses unfit for the incumbents to live in, or at least declared by them to be so, in a return made-by them to the parliament in the year 1818. The Poor-mates were, in 1818, 46,6104. 19s. 8d., the number of Pausens 5,365; the reaul of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 360,187L 12s. Old.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 48,771; the number of inhabited houses in 1821 was 8,879; the number of uninbabited houses at the same period was 168; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-sixth of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 2; the poor-rates in 1776, were annually endy 7,5144.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 132; the number of scres to a person, 4; the mumber of scres to a house, 26; the male population in 1821 was 24,020; the families employed in agriculture, were in number 6,435; the families employed in trade or handicraft, were 2,937 in number; the number of other families was 1,026; the agricultural male population, 14,847; able labourers, 7,483; the number of acres in this county to every able-bedied labourer, $1. Huntingdon is supposed to have been formerly all forest, excepting that part (about 44,000 acres) which consisted of fea-land; and not to have been completely disafforested till the time of The air of the Edward the First. county is good excepting in the Northern or fenny parts, where it is not es-teemed so. Of that part of the county that does not consist of fen-land, nor woodland; a considerable part remains unen-closed, but cultivated in what are called common fields, where every man is obliged to pursue the course of tillage adopted by the parish at large. And the rotation is generally thus: fallow, wheat or barley, beans or peas, oats. Where the land is fit for turnips, the fallow gives way to this crop. The fallow gives way to this crop. The soil of the county is various; in the uplands, it consists of loam mixed with gravel, or a lestn with strong deep clay. There are then the skirty lands, which are a kind of moor bordering on the fen, but not being so frequently flooded. These skirty lands are amazingly productive of posture. The fens themselves are also productive of ex-cellent corn, but the expenses consequent on the overflowing of them is often so great as to cause them to be forfeited to the corporation of the Bedford Level. The cattle are chiefly the Lancashire, Leicestershire and Derhyshire breeds; and the sheep, a missture between the & giospteushine and Lincolnshire broods.

There is some weel-stapling and some spinning of your carried on in the county, also no manufacturing of any kind is known of in Huntingdonshim.

KENT.

Al MARITIME COUNTY, the South-Eastern extremity of England, being bounded on the North, by the Thames and the German Ocean; on the East, by the sea; on the South, by the sea and the county of Sussex; and on the West, by the counties of Sussex and Surrey. It is of an irregular obling shape, about 63 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. It is divided into five Lathes; namely, St. Augustine, Aylesford, Scray, Shepway, Sutton-at-Hone. Its RIVERS are, the Thames, the Cray, the Darent, the Medway, the Ravensbourne, the Rother, , the Less and Greater Stours. It has 28 market-towns; Ashford, Bromley, Canterbury, Chatham, Cranbrook, Dartford, Deal, Dover, Faversham, Folkestone, Gravesend, Greenwich, Hythe, Lydd, Maidstone, Margate, Milton, Queenborough, Ramsgate, Rochester, Romney, Sandwich, Smarden, Seven-Oaks, Tenterden, Tonbridge, Wester-ham, Woolwich. The county of Kent returns altogether 18 members to parliament: namely, 2 for the county, 2 for the city of Canterbury, 2 for the city of Rochester, 2 for Maidstone, 2 for Queenborough, 2 for Dover, 2 for Hythe, 2 for Romney, and 2 for Sand-Kent contains 1,537 square miles, or 983,680 acres, and 411 parishes. It had 44 monastic establishzments, and 64 public charities; it has 15 parishes with no church; 47 pagrishes with less than 100 people; 73 periales with no personage houses; and

84 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in. The POOR-RATES were, in 1818, 418,723l. 14s. 54d.; the number of PAUPERS is 41,926; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 1,644,179l. Os. 2d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 426,016; the number of inhabited houses, in 1821, was 70,507; the number of uninhabited houses at the same epoch 3,806; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-third compared with the rental; the number of paupers, com-pared with the number of houses, is 1 to 2; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 78,8301.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 212; the number of acres to a person, 2; the number of acres to a house, 13. The male population, in 1821, was 209,833; the families employed in agriculture were in number 30,869; the families employed in handicraft were 30,180 in number; the number of other families was 24,890; the agricultural male population 75,371; able labourers, 37,685; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer is 26. It is in the Province of Canter-BURY, partly in the Diocese of Can-TERBURY, and partly in that of Rocers-TER; and it is in the Home CIRCUIT. The important geographical situation of this county; its great beauty; the quantity and variety of its productions; together with some proud circumstances connected with its history, have made it the flower of the English counties. Excepting three districts, the Marshes, the Weald, and the Isle of Thanet, it consists of a continued cluster of small hills with their consequent dells. Two chains of hills higher than the rest run through the middle of it from East to West, generally being about 8 miles distance from one another. These extend nearly the whole length of the county, beginning at Westerham, close on the borders of Surrey, and extending to the sea-coast at Folkestone. The marshes, a rich tract of corn and pasture land, lie down on the Northern side of the county, close upon the Thames, and in a Southern corner of the county, bordering on the sea; the latter being The Weald is called Romney Marsh. an extensive tract of country beginning at Romney Marsh and stretching in a North-West direction towards Westerham. It is supposed to have been anciently entirely wooded, and to have been inhabited by nothing but bears and other wild animals. Wood is still its characteristic, but it is also thickly inhabited, and is in the best state of cultivation. In its produce no county in England is more various and none so famous. In the Isle of Thanet, the Eastern extremity of the county, the largest crops of corn are produced annually that probably any country in the world knows of. Other parts of the county are perhaps as well adapted to this produce, but being more valuable in other crops, are not so frequently made to produce it. In the neighbourhood of Maidstone, Canterbury, and Sandwich, immense quantities of hops are grown; in such quantity, that it is estimated that Kent pays nearly one-fourth of the hop duty every year. In these neighbourhoods the produce of fruit for the London markets is also very great; filberts, apples, cherries, plumbs, and even raspberries, currants, and gooseberries, are cultivated in whole fields; these particularly between Tombridge and Maidstone, a district called the garden of Kent. The soil is various, the only really barren spot being Blackheath, in the neighbourhood of London; the marshes are of a deep, dark alluvial soil; the higher parts of the county are, a yellow loam mixed with fints of the same colour, upon beds of chalk; the hop grounds and fruit grounds, are a deep and dark loam. mixed here and there with gravel or clay; the Weald is, for the greater part, a clayey loam, being, here and there, a strong clay, proper for wheat, and excellent for the growth of timber. The cattle are not peculiar to the county, nor is there any distinct breed most in favour among the farmers. The sheep, however, are nearly all of the South Down breed. In manufactures the county is not renowned at all, there being nothing but a little manufacturing of muslins and brocaded silk, and stockings at Canterbury; at Deptford copperas-works; in the Isle of Thanet salt; at Ospringe a public powder manufactory; at Dartford and Crayford iron mills; and at Dartford and Boxley, are excellent paper mills. This county is said to have been the first converted to Christianity; and here it is that the tenure called Gavelkind is more prevalent than in all the rest of England.

CANTERBURY, is situated in a pleasant and Realthy spot, 55 miles E. by S. from London. Of its antiquity there is no doubt; for its neighbourhood has, at different times, been found to be replete with the relics of Druidism, and not less abounding in those of the Romans. As a Saxon metropolis, Bede says, in mentioning the arrival of St. Augustine, "it was the chief place of all the do-minion of Ethelbert." St. Augustine arrived in 596, and the king, upon his conversion, retired to the Reculver, giving Augustine his palace, and the adjacent possessions. The vicinity of Canterbury to the Isles of Thanet and Sheppey, the two chief landing-places of the Danes, made it a prey to these barbarians more often than it would have been had it been more remote from these places. They entered and sacked it in 851. In 918 they entered it again, but were driven out by Elfseds, the daughter of Alfred the Great. In 1009 the inhabitants rescued it by a ransom of 30,000l.; and, in 1011, they besieged it, took it, and, after putting the inhabitants to the sword, burned it down. It was rebuilt, however, and before the end of Canute's reign, it had become again an important city; and Stow says, that, at the time of the Doomesday survey, it was as large a place as London. William the First is supposed to have built a magnificent castle here, the ruined remains of which are still on the south-west side of the town, near the entrance from Ashford. The original walls round the town are supposed to have been the work of the Romans; but it is certain that Queen Eleanor, mother of Rich. I., had the town well fortified. In the reign of Rich. II., the fortifications were well repaired, as they were again in Hen. IV.'s time. The principal gates were six in number; namely, the West-gate, the North-gate, Bur-gate, St.-George's gate, Riding-gate, and Winchesp-gate: of these, West-gate is the only one standing now. The cathedral of Canterbury is a very stately building, exhibiting specimens of the architecture of almost every age, from the arrival of the Normans to the time of Hen. VIII. The original buildings of the Suxons were built and hurned down no less than three several times; and the present building was begun by the Archbishop Lanfranc in 1070. The north-west entrance, being of Norman architecture, is thought to be a part of the building of In 1170, the archbishop, Lanfranc. Thomas à Becket, was murdered in this cathedral, and the number of pilgrims who flocked to his shrine with their donations was such, that it enabled future archbishops to erect the additions and make the decorations that we behold at the present day. To form an idea of the value of some of the presents that were made, I will copy from Erasmus, who saw the shrine just before the "Protestant Reformation," and who thus describes it: "They drew up a chest or case of wood, which inclosed a chest or coffin of gold, together with inestimable riches, gold being the meanest thing to be seen there: it shone all over, and sparkled and glittered with jewels of the most rare and precious kinds, and of an extraordinary size, some of them being larger than a goose's egg. When this was displayed, the Prior, who was always present, took a white wand, and touching every jewel with it, told the name and the value, and the donor of it, for the chief of them were the gifts of monarchs." In the fiftieth year after the murder of Becket, Pope Honorius ordered a jubilee in honour of him, which was repeated every fifty years; and, in estimating the popularity of Becket, all historians state, that, at the jubilee held in 1420, no less than 100,000 persons attended the celebration. The cathedral still contains a shrine of this famous man, but the plunderers of the "Reformation" took care to despoil it of its gold and jewels. It still also contains the monuments or memorials of many famous men and women, as those of Hen. IV. and his queen, Joan of Navarre; of Edward the Black Prince; of St. Dunstan; of Cardinal Pole, and many others. Before the "Reforma-tion," it had no less than thirty altars within it, and the town contained, besides the cathedral, the religious houses here enumerated; St. Augustine's Monastery, founded by the converted king, Ethelbert; the yearly revenues were 1.2741. 0s. 10d., now worth 29,4801. 17s. od. St. Gregory's Hospital, founded reformation at 1661. 4s. 5 d. yearly, now worth 3,3281. 9s. 2d.; granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury. St. Sepul-chre's Nunnery, founded, 1100, by Archbishop Anselm; revenues 381. 19s. 71d., now worth 779l. 12s. 6d.; granted, 38 Hen. VIII., to James Hale. Eastbridge Hospital, founded by Lanfranc, for the entertainment of Pilgrims; value yearly 23t. 18s. 9\frac{1}{2}d., now worth 478t. 15s. 10d. yearly. St. Lawrence's Hospital, founded by Hugh, the Abbot of St. Augustine's; yearly revenue, estimated at 31t. 10s. 7d., now worth 630t. 11s. 8d.; granted to Sir John Parrot, at the time of the "Reformation." An Augustine Friary, founded in the reign of Edw. I., by Richard French, baker; granted, by Hen. VIII., to G. Harper. A Dominican Friary, founded in 1221, by King Hen. III.; granted, 2 Eliz., to Thomas Wiseman, and then to John Harrington. A Franciscan Monastery, founded, in 1270, by John Diggs, an alderman of the city; granted, 31 Hen. VIII., to Thomas Spilman. Canterbury has eleven churches, besides the cathedral; its streets are spacious, and its houses substantial; but the outside of the town is disfigured by some of the most spacious barracks that are to be found in England. It contains the sixteen parishes of All-Saints, St. Alphage, St. Andrew, Archbishops-Palace, Christchurch, St. George-the-Martyr, Holy-Cross, St. Margaret, St. Martin, St. Mary-Breden, St. Mary-Bredman, St. Mary-Magdalen, St. Mary-North-gate, St. Mildred, St. Paul, and St. Peter. The population is 12,745. There is a little silk-weaving carried on in the town; but its principal trade is in the hop-plantations of its neighbourhood. It is governed, under a charter granted to it by James I., by a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, including a chamberlain, twenty-four common-councilmen, including a sheriff, a town-clerk, a coroner, and various other inferior officers; and it is represented in parliament by two members, chosen by the freemen, about 1600 in number. Market, Wed. and Sat.; fair, Oct. 10, cattle and pedlary; a market toll-free every Wed. for hops.

- ROCHESTER, is a very ancient city, situated on the banks of the Medway, 8½ miles North from Maidstone, and 29 East by South from London. Its name is supposed to have been originally Hrof-coastre, from a Saxon chief named Hrof, and thence Rechester. At the conversion of Ethelbert, king of the Saxons, in 600, he caused a church to be built here and dedicated to Saint Andrew, and he raised it to a bishop's see. It has, in all times since, been principally a military station. It was sacked by the Denes in 839. In 885 the inhabitants withstood them till Alfred drove them away; in 986, King Ethelred having quarrelled with its bishop, he besieged Rochester, but, being unable to reduce it, wasted the lands of the see. In 12 years after that, the Danes again besieged it, took it and pillaged it. William I. granted Rochester to his half brother, Odo, bishop of Baioux, and on his dibgrace, it fell to the crown, in which it long remained; so long that the church became neglected and almost in ruins; and in the time of Hen. I., he farmed it out to the citisens for 201, a year. But Gundulph being made bishop, by the aid of his friend

Lanfranc, archbishop of Canterbury, he obtained possession of the temporalities of the see, and began rebuilding the church, or cathedral; a part of which building forms some part of the present cathedral. It presents specimens of the architecture of four distinct epochs; the nave and west front, and the massive bell-tower between the transepts on the North side, are of Gundulph's construc-The North side of the West transept was built by the monks, Richard de Eastgate, and Thomas de Mapham, about 1180. The South side, by the monk Richard de Waledene, ahout the beginning of the 12th century; and the choir and upper transept in the reigns of King John and King Henry III., by William de Hoo. This city formerly had 4 churches, besides the cathedral. It has now but 2. The castle is a ponderous ruin, standing in the South-West angle of the city, on an abrupt eminence rising up from the Medway which guards it on that side; and having on the South, East and North sides of it a deep ditch. It is, by some, stated to have been built by Casar. That it was the work of the Romans there is little doubt from the great number of Roman coins found at different times within the walls. William I. repaired and garrisoned it; as did many of his successors, and it has stood several sieges. The keep which is now standing is said to have been built by Gundulph, the bishop; and other parts of , the ruin are clearly of Norman architec-On account of its loyalty displayed several times, Rochester has been chartered by several of the kings of England; but it is now governed under that of Charles the First, by virtue of which the corporation consists of a mayor, 12 aldermen (of which the mayor is one), 12 assistants or common council, a recorder, a town-clerk, 2 chamberlains, a principal sergeant-atmace, a water-bailiff, and other inferior The citizens are principally officers. engaged in bout-building, or other maritime affairs, and in the oyster fisheries of the Medway. The city is represented in parliament by 2 members, who are elected by the freemen, about 630 in number. It contains the parishes of St. Margaret, St. Nicholas, Stroud within, and part of Chatham. The whole popula. is 24,06S. This town is illpaved, its streets are narrow, dark, and disagreeable. There is a market on Friday, and the fairs are on May 30,

Dec. 11, horses, bullocks, and various commodities; and fourth Tues. in every month, cattle. At Rochester, a cathedral and Benedictine Priory, founded, in the year 600, by King Ethelbert; yearly value 4861. 11s. 5d., now worth 9,7311. 8s. 4d. This is the cathedral which is mentioned above.

LANCASHIRB.

THIS is a maritime county, bounded on the North by Cumberland and Westmorland, on the East by Yorkshire, on the South by Cheshire, and on the West by the Irish sea. It is of very irregular form, about 74 miles in length, and shout 44g in breadth. It is divided into six hundreds; Amounderness, Blackburn, Leyland, Lonsdale north of the sands, Lonsdale south of the sands, and Salford. Its rivers are, the Culder, the Duddon, the Crake, the Loyne, the Douglas, the Ribble, the Mersey, and the Irsell. It has 28 market-towns; Blackburn, Bolton, Broughton, Burnley, Bury, Cartmel, Chorley, Clitheroe, Colne, Dalton, Garstang, Haslingdon, Hawkeshead, Hornby, Kirkham, Lancaster, Liverpool, Leigh, Manchester, Newton, Ormskirk, Poulton, Prescot, Preston, Rochdale, Ulverstone, Warrington, Wigan. It returns 14 members to parliament; 2 for the county, and two each for the boroughs of Lancaster, Liverpool, Presten, Newton, Wigan, and Clitheroe. Lancashire contains 1,831 square miles, or 1,171,840 acres, and 70 parishes. It had formerly 16 monastic establishments, 84 public charities; it has 4 parishes with no church, 1 parish with less than 100 in-_habitants, 126 parishes with no parsonage-houses, 14 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in; the poor-rates were, in 1818, 476,8634. 6s. 44d.; the number of paupers is 46,261, the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 3,087,774l. 8s. 9d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 1,052,859; the number of inhabited houses in 1821, was 176,449, the number of uninhsbited houses at the same epoch 5,790; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-sixth, compared with the rental; the number of paupers compared with the number of houses is 1 to 4; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 50,985; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 575; the number of acres to a person 1; the number of acres to a house, 6; the male population, in 1821, was 512,476; the families employed in agriculture were in number 22,723; the families employed in handicraft were 152,271 in number; the number of other families was 28,179; the agricultural male population 57,316; able labourers, 28,158; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer, 40. It is in the PROVINCE OF York, and in the Diocese of Chester, and it is in the Northern Circuit. The aspect of this county is, in some parts, mountainous; as that of the northern side, and along the eastern border. Near the sea-coast, and along the southern ridge of the county, the ground is low and level: no county is sore various in its soil; none has better than this in some, and none has worse than it has in many parts. The district which lies between the Ribble and the Mersey is a fine, sandy loam, with a sub-stratum of red rock, or of marl, approaching to clay. A vast district consists of moors, common, and peatlands, where nothing is cultivated, and nothing preserved but moor-game. The county is not remarkable for its produce; indeed, it does not rank with the average of the counties of England in its agricultural products. Towards the seacoast, and in the other level spots, wheat and oats are produced in good quantity, and the dairies are tolerably good. The woodlands in this district are not worth mentioning, and it is only in the middle of the county that they are at all luxuriant. The cattle of Lancashire are not of a peculiar or superior breed; though, before the attention of the whole county was so turned to ma-nufacturing as it has been of late, the breed of neat cattle was celebrated. The cows are large, with long wide horns; the sheep of the finest parts of the county are generally the produce of other counties, and those fed on the mountains are such as we always find in such districts, small and ill-shaped, but extremely hardy. Coal-mines, of considerable extent, are worked in several parts of the county, but more particularly in the neighbourhoods of Manchester, Bolton, and Wigan, and near the latter is found what is called the canal-coal: -- slate in great quantity near Hawkeshead, and it is thence imported to different parts of the country. Iron ore is found very abundant in the vicinage of Dalton and of Ulverstone; and at Anglesack, near Chorley, there is one lead-mine of considerable value. In manufactures it is that this county has for some years been the rival of almost the whole world; Manchester, Lancaster, Bolton, Wigan, Blackburn, Preston, Rochdale, and many others that might be enumerated, are all very large and populous places, and all absolutely dependent upon the manufacture of cottom goods.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

M INLAND COUNTY, bounded on the North by Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire, on. the East by Rutlandshire and Lincolsshire, on the South by Northamptonshire, and on the West by a small part of Derbyshire, Staffordshire, and Warwickshire. About 30 miles long, and 25 broad. It is divided into six hundreds; Flamland, Gastree, Goscote (East), Goscote (West), Guthlaxton, Sparkenhoe. The principal nivers are, the Sour, the Swift, the Welland, the Avon, the Wreke, and the Anker. It has 9 Marker-rowns; namely, Ashbyde-la-Zouch, Boswerth, Market-Harborough, Hinckley, Luicester, Loughborough, Lutterworth, Melton-Mowbray, and Mount-Sorrel. It sends four members to parliament; namely, two for the county, and two for the bo-rough of Leicester. It is in the Pro-VINCE OF CANTERBURY, in the DIOCESE OF LINCOLN, and in the MIDLAND CIRCUIT. This county contains 804 square miles, or 514,560 acres, and 216 parishes. It had 26 monestic es--tablishments, 58 public charities; it has

1 parish with no, church, 25 parishes with less than 190 inhabitants, 35 parishes with no parsonage-house, 40 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in; the poor-rates were, in 1818, 157,2751. 18s. 8id.; the number of paupers is 15,655; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 902,2171. 6s. 6d.; the population, according to a return haid before parliament in 1831, was 174,471; the number of inhabited kouses in 1821 was 34,775; the number of uninbehited houses at the same epoch, 1,141; the poor-rates bear the proportion of oneifth compared with the rental; the number of propers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to 2; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 23,5811.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 216; the number of scres to a person, S; the number of scres to u bouse, 14; the male population, in 1821, was 86,390; the families employed in agriculture were in number 13,098; the families employed in handlerest were 20,297 in number; the number of oth families was 3,481; the agricultural mule population 30,579; the number of able labourers 15,289; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer, 33. Leicestershire may fairly be called a level county; it is scarcely hilly even in any part, and no-where mountainous. The risings are gentle, though sometimes to a considerable height. The land is, in most parts of it, excellent, being either light or sandy loam, or a stiff marly loam; but, for the most part, it is something between these, and very deep. About Lutter-worth, in the very southern extremity of the county, it is a light but rich loam; at Hinckley, nearly the same. In the north, about Ashby-de-la-Zouch, it is various, but the marly loam pre-vails. In the north-eastern part, about Melton-Mowbray, it is a heavy deep loam, with strong clay underneath, such deep soils being the very best for grass; the far greater part of this county is in pasture; wheat, barley, and cats are also grown to a considerable extent, and beens in prodigious quantities, from time immemorial, as may be judged by the circumstance that there is, in one of the hundreds, the village of Barton-inthe-Beans. Cheese has, of late years, been made in good quantity, and a large cheese fair is annually held at Leicester for the sale of it. It so much resembles in quality that which is made at Stilton in Huntingdonshire, that it also is called Stilton cheese. This county is but little wooded, except by the plan-tations of ornament, and the timber grown in the hedges; and it has scarcely any waste, if we except Charnwood Forest, a considerable tract of land lying between Mount-Sorrel and Ashby-de-The famous new Leicester la-Zouch. sheap originated here, superseding the Old Leicester and forest breeds, which were before very justly held in great estimation. The new Leicester is hornless, broad, straight, and long-backed square in the flank, short-legged, and long-woolled. It is prized for its great tendency to fatten in a short time, and for the superiority of its flesh. The horned cattle of Leicestershire are not less famous than the sheep, one buil having fetched the price of 400 guineas by auction in 1793. There is not much manufacturing carried on in this county: a little stocking-weaving in a few of the towns, and some ribbon-weaving at Leicester, comprise the whole; and it has no mines.

LINCOLNSHIRE.

A MARITIME COUNTY, bounded on the North by the estuary of the Humber, on the Bast by the German Ocean, on the South by the counties of Cambridge, Northempton, and Rutland, and on the West by Leicestershire and Notting. hamshire. It is about 76 miles in length, and 46 in breadth. It is divided into 3 parts; Holland, Lindsey, and Kesteven; and these are subdivided into 80 hundreds and wapentakes; namely, Ellee, Kinton, Skirbeck, Aswardhurn, Aveland, Beltisloe, Boothby-Graffo, Flexwell, Langue, Loveden, Ness, Winnibriggs and Three, Grantham with Stoke, Aslacoe, Soke of Bolinbroke, Bradley, Calceworth, Candleshoe, Corringham, Gartree, Hill, Soke of Horncastle, Lawress, Louth-Eske, Ludborough, Manley, Walshcroft, Wraggoe, Yarborough. The rivers of Lincolnahire are, the Witham, the Ankholme, the Welland, the Dun, and the Idle. On the north side is the Humber, and on the South the Trent. There are 26 market-towns in this county; Alford, Barton, Boston, Bourn, Burton, Corby, Crowland, Mount-Desping, Falkingham, Gainsborough, Glanford Bridge, Grantham, Grimsby, Holbeach, Horn-castle, Lincoln, Louth, Market-Raisen, Saltfleet, Sleaford, Spalding, Spilsby, Stamford, Tattersall, Wainfleet, Wragby. It returns 18 members to parliament; 2 for the shire, 2 for the city, and 2 for each of the boroughs of Boston, Grantham, Great Grimsby, and Stamford. This county contains 2,740 square miles, or 1,758,720 acres, and 629 parishes. It had 80 monastic establishments, and - 68 public charities; it has 24 parishes with no church, 119 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants, 162 parishes with no parsonage-houses, 191 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in; the POOR-RATES Were, in 1818, 233,5121. 12s. 64d., the number of PAUPERS is 15,442, the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 2,061,8304. Ss. 9d.; the pepulation, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 283,058; the number of inhabited houses in 1821 was 53,813; the number of uninhabited houses at the same epoch, 979; the poor-rates bear the proportion of oneeighth, compared with the tental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is one to four; the poor-rates in 1776 were 31,2671. the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 103; the number of acres to a person, 6; the number of acres to a house, 32; the male population, in 1821, was 141,570; the families employed in agriculture were 34,900 in number; the families employed in handicraft were 15,845; the number of other families was 8,015; the agricultural male population, 84,084; able labourers, 42,042; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer, 41. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, in the Diogese of Lin-COLN, and in the MIDLAND CIRCUIT. Lincolnshire, as to its soil, is, by most writers, divided into the wolds, the heaths, and the fens. The wolds, a high open country, extend from Spilsby to Burton, near the Humber, a distance of forty miles. The soil is pretty generally, all slong these wolds, a sandy loam on a flinty loam, and with chalk beneath. The heaths extend for some distance both north and south of Lincoln; and the fens constitute the southeastern part of the county, bordering on the sea. From the number of fens that are to be found elsewhere than in the district last mentioned, as well as from the influence of that one, Lincolnshire has always been considered an unhealthy county, giving agues, and breeding fevers very destructive to its population. So many of the minor fens have been drained, however, and the larger ones so much abridged, that that great drawback to the county is now much mitigated. The wolds, heaths, and all the higher grounds of the county, produce abundant crops of corn, and, together with the fens, produce beef und muttous, the finest and fattest in the world; and the greatest weight per acre. It is the first grazing county in England, take it altogether, and is the chief supplier of

, the Landon markets; and it is also the finest breeding county in England. It has very long been famous for its horses, for the saddle as well as for harness, and these are bred chiefly about Normanby and Burten. The oxen are described by an experienced grazier as with " great heads and short horns; stout in the bone, and deep in the belly; with short necks and fleshy quarters, narrow hips and chines, high in their rumps, and bare on the shoulders," and weighing, when fat, from eleven to twelve hundred. The sheep are very large, horned, and well calculated for grazing in the marshes, and for travelling when fat. Upon this breed Mr. Bakewell, of Leicestershire, founded his new Lei-cester breed. They weigh well, and produce large and heavy fleeces. Rab-bits have always been a commodity of great consideration in the light soils of this county, and immense warrens are preserved for the purpose of supplying the country and London with the skins; a species of commerce once so prosperous as to have made these animals a stock full as valuable as any that could be awned. Of late years this has rather fallen off, and many warrens are now broken up and turned to other account. . Geese in the fens are still a most important animal, particularly in those which cannot be perfectly drained, and are, therefore, available in no other way. The quantities in which these birds are kept is astonishing; and a detail of the curious manner of mannging them would be amusing, but it would take up too much space in a work of this nature. Lincolnshire has no mines, and no manufactories of any note.

- LINCOLN, is 133½ miles N.W. from London. It is situated on the top and side of a lofty hill, having a deep descent to the South, where the river Witham rups close under its walls. It is supposed to have been one of the strong-bolds of the Britons, being called by them Lindcoit. In the time of the Romans, it was also a strong and well-fertified place; shid Bede identifies the spot by the names of Lindcollinum and Lindcollinus. The ancient fortifications inclosed an area of about thirty acres; but the walls of these, with a trifling exception, are now pulled down; and, of four principal gates that were former.

ly in them, only one is now remaining; namely Newport gate. After the Romans quitted England, Lincoln, as well as every other considerable place, became subject to the insurations of either Piots, Saxons, or Denes. In 516, Arthur here opposed the forces of Cerdio, who was besieging Lincoln. Soon after it fell into the hands of the Saxons, who, after destroying a considerable part of it, rebuilt and well fortified it. In the 10th century, the Danes having obtained possession of it, Edmund Ironside marched against them and drove them out of it; but Canute, in 1016, laid waste a great part of the county of Lincoln, and obtained a division of the kingdom, by which he retained a part for himself, and suffered Edmund to possess the other part. When William I. came over to England, he found Lincoln one of the largest, most populous, and most flourishing cities in the Island; and in the Doomsday survey, it is reported to have 1,072 mansions. William gave orders to have a strong castle built here in 1086. This building is now so demolished that, from the ruins that remain, one cen scarcely judge of its former ap-pearance, its inward contrivance, or its dimensions; but it is said to have been built upon the site of 166 houses, and to have occupied a space of 1932 feet. On this space are now the Shire-hall and the jail. In 1140, the Empress Mand took up her residence in this castle when she came to England for the purpose of opposing Stephen; she fortised it strongly, but it was soon reduced by Stephen's forces. During the struggle between King John and the confederated barons, Gilbert de Gaunt held Lincoln in the interest of Philip of France, but John took it in 1216. John Duke of Gaunt became possessed of Lincoln at part of the Duchy of Lancaster, and he made its castle his summer residence. In 1301, the king (Edward I.) held his court there a whole year, and held parliament to consult on the propriety of acceding to the pope's letters forbidding the king to invade Scotland. In 1305 the king held another parliament at Lincoln, in which, amongst other things, he confirmed Magna Charta. And in the reign of Edward II., a third perliament was held there, this one being assembled for devising the means of opposing the outrages of the Scots. In 1446, Henry VI. went to Lincoln, and there held his court; and ofter the battle of Boswerthfield, Henry VII. speat three days at Lincoln offering up thanksgivings for its successful issue. At the beginning of the civil wars in the reign of Charles I. that king went to Lincoln, and endeavoured to secure the support of its citizens: he succeeded so far as to receive a promise to that effect from the mouth of the recorder. Since that period no remarkable spech connects itelf materially with Lincoln. This city self materially with Lancoun. a new only is new well paved and well lighted, but many of the houses are very eld. It has been much improved of late years by the making of a new road through it, and by the building of a new market-place and other buildings. The pride of the terms and control is its magnification. of the town and county is its magnifi-cent cathedral. The first hishop of Lincoln was St. Remigius, who built the first cathedral, which was about 1086. This building being nearly destroyed by fire in the year 1124, Bishop Alexander, then bishop of Lincoln, began and nearly finished, this extraordinary building. Subsequently to this, however, time and accident have at divers times caused it to want great repairs, and these, together with additions, have been so amply and so judiciously afforded by the successive bishops of Lincoln, that its beauty as well as its present grandeur must be ascribed to many. It is situated on the highest part of the hill on which Lincoln stands, and owing to the fintness of the surrounding country, it can be seen at a distance of 20 miles from the S.E. and S.W. of the town. The monks are said to have admired it so much as to imagine that the devil equid never look at it without frowns of anger; and thence the proverb, "He looks like the devil over Lincoln," applied to malicious persons. This has always been the largest and richest diocese of England. The city, besides the cathedral, had formerly more than fifty churches; only eleven now remain. It had also the religious houses herein-under mentioned before the "Reformation:" namely, a dilbertine Priory in the South-West suburbs, valued in Henry VIII.'s reign at 2701. 1s. 3d. yearly, now worth 5,4011. 5s. yearly; granted by Henry VIII. to the Duke of Suffolk. A Benedictine Cell, founded by Henry II., valued at the "Reformation" at 261. 1s. 3d. yearly, now worth 5211. 5s. yearly; granted to John Bellew and John Broxhelm. The Holy Innocents

Haspital, founded by Reinigica, biddep of Lincoln, for lepereus persons; granted by Edward VI., to Sir William Cecil. An Augustine Monastery, An Augustine Monastery, founded prior to the year 1291, on the South side of the city; granted, 37 Henry VIII., to John Bellew and John Broxheim. A Deminican Friery in the East of the city; granted by Henry VIII., to John Bellow and John Broxholm. A Franciscan Friary in High-street, founded by Odo of Kilkemy, Ireland, in the year 1209; granted, by Henry VIII., to John Broxhelm. The trade of Linsoln is principally in corn and wool, which is exported into Yorkshire. It is governed by a mayor, 12 aldermen, 2 sheriffs, 28 common-councilmen, and 4 chamberlains, who have a recorder and deputy recorder, town-clerk, 4 coroners, and inferior officers. It was incorporated by Edward II. It sends 2 members to parliament, the right of election being in the freemen, and the number of these about 1,100. It has a market on Friday; and the fairs are on April 24 and three following days, sheep and pedlary; July 5, last Wed. in July, and every other Wed., cattle and sheep; Oct. 6, Nov. 28, horses, cattle, &c. LONDON, the metropolis of England, a bishop's see, and the seat of the government of the kingdom, comprises, the city and liberties of London, the city and liberties of Westminster, and the borough of Southwark. These, to the eye, form but one vast town, of which the cities of London and Westminster are in Middlesex, sad the borough of Southwark is in Surrey. The whole town is situated on the banks of the river Thames, and at about 70 miles It stands in an extenfrom its mouth. sive and rich valley, which is bounded, on the South, by the Surrey hills, and on the North, by Highgate and Hamp-stead hills. It is 75 miles long, from East to West, and about 5 miles in breadth, from North to South, covering a space of about 18 square miles. The population, including the out parishes, was reckoned, in 1821, to be 1,S11,599 souls. Of the antiquity of London, and of its great consequence even in very remote times, there can be no doubt. Some autiquarians have affirmed it to have been a place of consideration even before Rome itself; but, discarding all such stuff as this, we have it named by Tacitus, in the fourteenth book of his ennels of Roman History, section 23, as being in the year 59, when the Roman general Suctonius was here, a place of great resort for merchants. As to the origin of its name, some derive it from the British words Llong and Dinas, which mean, a city of skips. Others say, it comes from two other British words, Lieurs, which means full, and Dyn. man; or populous. The Government of the town of London is divided, and I shall take the city first. This is, in fact, a little republic of itself, having privileges to such an extent as almost to make it independent of the Government of the kingdom. Its chief civil officers are, the lord mayor, 2 sheriffs, 26 aldermen, 96 common-councilmen, a chamberlain, a recorder, and a common serjeent. These are all elected, and nearly all of them, by the citizens. The lord mayor is elected at the hustings in Guildhall on Michaelmas-day. He is chosen out of the aldermen, of whom the people elect two, and, out of the two, the mayor and aldermen appoint the one that is to The two sheriffs are fill the office. elected on Midsummer-day, and at the same place. The citizens are the electors, and any person is eligible; but it is usual to elect aldermen. election is by show of hands, and the common serjeant declares who is elected. The aldermen are elected from amongst the citizens by the different wards of the city, every ward electing one alderman. This is at a wardmote; and the elected party is alderman for life; though, formarly, they were elected for the year only, as the lord mayor, sheriffs, and common-council, are. They are the magistrates of their wards, and hold their respective courts, in that capacity. The common-councilmen are ninety-six in number; they are elected by the wards, each ward sending a certain number, and the election takes place in wardmote on St. Thomas's day, the citizens being the voters. The chamberlain is elected at the same time with the sheriffs, and he generally continues in office during his life. The recorder is elected by the court of aldermen, and the common serjeant by the commoncouncil. The lord mayor is the chief magistrate; he sits as chief justice at the Old Bailey in the trials of prisoners, and he has besides a Court of Equity. The sheriffs are sheriffs of the city and of the county of Middlesex; and, besides acting as other sheriffs of counties, they have a court of their own in Guildhall for trying certain causes between man and man. The aldermen, as was said above, are magistrates of their particular wards; and they hold collectively what is called the Court of of Aldermen, in which, matters connected with the works of the city are regulated, the seeize of bread, and also

: the care of orphans, are. These are the principal courts of the city; excepting the Court of Orphons, which is, perhaps, the greatest of all; at any rate, with respect to its influence over the property of citizens. It is a court of the greatest antiquity, established in conformity with the most ancient and important customs of London respecting the disposing of personal property of the freemen of the city. All orphans of citizens are placed, if under age, under the tutelage of persons appointed by the court of aldermen; their property is managed by persons who, according to the custom, are controlled by the court of aldermen. The chamberlain's court is principally for the management of the city's accounts, for " the regulating of metters connected with apprentices, and also of orphans' moneys. The recorder is the judicial expounder of the city's laws. He is always with the lord mayor in his court, and pronounces the law, according to the custom of the city. The common serjeant is also a lawyer. He tries prisoners in the absence of the recorder; and he takes inventories and accounts of deceased freemen's estates, and, under the court of aldermen, takes the securities of guardians for the due performance of their trusts. There is also the Court of Common Council, which is something like the parliament. It consists of the representatives of the wards, the aldermen, and the lord mayor; and these, in a body, enact the by-laws by which the city is governed, and its trade regulated; they appoint committees annually for the dispatch of the city's affairs, and these make reports to the court, as occasion requires, of their proceedings. The wardmotes are summoned by the lord mayor; they are presided over by the alderman of the ward or his deputy, and the purpose of their assembling is, to correct abuses or annoyances in the particular ward. They are a good deal like the leet courts of counties. The court of conservancy for the river Thames is presided over by the lord mayor, in the counties adjacent to the cities of London and Westminster, and adjoining the Thames. He has a waterbailiff as deputy, whose duty it is to give him notice of all offences committed in the fishery of the river. The court of requests is a court instituted for the recovery of debts under forty shillings. It is presided over by commissioners. How the city came to be thus endowed with pairileges so lerge, with a chief magistrate and a parliament, and with courts, all of such exclusive power, remains to be shown. It claims all these under its charters; and the first charter to which it points is, one of William the Norman; but, in that charter, it is clear, from the terms, that the privileges of London were not conferred by the Norman, but only confirmed; and indeed it is contended that they had their origin in the time of the Britons. (See Bohun's "Privilegia, Londoni," preface, p. ix.). 1. William I. granted a charter by which he allows every man to be law worthy as he was in the days of King Edward the Confessor; and also that every child should be heir to his father. 2. Hen. I. granted a charter, by which the citizens have the right of electing their own sheriffs, and their own judges in criminal matters. It exempts the citizens from some taxes. from toll throughout the kingdom, and it provides for the enforcing of engagements, the recovery of debts, and for the enjoyment of the chases of Chiltre, Middlesex, and Surrey, for hunting. 3. Hen. II. grants a confirmation of the preceding charters, and frees the city from some taxes; and confirms some of its peculiar laws. 4. Rich. I., in the fifth year of his reign, grants a confirmation of the last preceding. In the eighth of his reign, he grants the removal of all the wears in the Thames, and that the keepers of the Tower shall not in future let wears to their profit. 5. King John granted the city five charters. By the first, he confirmed those of Hen. II. and Rich. I. By the second, he confirms to them the choosing of sheriffs of London and Middlesex, with all the customs of the sheriffwick by water as well as land; and by this charter he regulates the choosing and removing of sheriffs. By the third, he grants that all weers be removed out of the Thames and Medway, and he remits all pensities that the keepers of the Tower have exacted yearly on account of wears. In the fourth, he grants the berons (i.e. aldermen) of the city the privilege of choosing a mayor annually, to be presented to him or his justices for approval; and at the end of the year, to choose another, or to He reserves the re-elect the same. chamberlainship to himself. In the fifth, he grants that the guild of weavers shall not be in the city. 6. Hen. III. granted the city several charters. By the first, he confirmed the second charter

' of John without alteration. By the second, he confirmed the fourth of John. By the third, he confirmed the second of Richard 1., and the third of John. By the fourth, be granted it a confirmation of its former charters. By the fifth, he granted the inhabitants of the county of Middlesex the warren of Staines, and gave leave that it be diswarrened and disforested. By the sixth charter, he granted Queenhithe to the city for a yearly sum of 501. In the seventh, he confirmed the charter of Henry II., and granted them 71. per annum on account of the liberty of St. Paul's. In his eighth charter, he granted to the citizens of London liberty to traffic with their merchandise where they please, and without paying toll. Soon after this, the city forfeited its charters, by joining in Leicester's re-bellion, but, in two years afterwards, they were restored by Henry's ninth charter, in which he granted an addition of privileges. 7. Edw. I. granted the city a charter, by which he secured to it all the privileges that it enjoyed before, and freed it from certain taxes. 8. Edw. II., having received aid of men from the city, granted, that that be not drawn into a precedent. 9. Edw. III. granted it a very important charter, confirming all its privileges, and granting, moreover, that the mayor be one of the judges of jail delivery; that merchant strangers be compelled to sell their goods in 40 days, and not keep houses in the city, but only lodge there; that neither the king's marshal nor his steward of the household should exercise their power in the city; that the lord mayor be his escheator in it; and that the citizens be not obliged to go or send to war. He also grants that the citizens of London be not taxed any more than other commons of the kingdom; that they be quit of tallage; that the liberties of the city be not taken into the hands of the king for any "personal trespass," or "judgment of any minister of the city." It grants also, that the purveyor of the household should not make prize of goods belonging to citizens without their consent; that there be no market within seven miles of London; that all inquisitions be taken by the justices of London in St. Martin's-le-Grand, and no-where else, except inquisitions for the town of London, andthe jail delivery of Newgate; and that none of the freemen of the city be impleaded or troubled at the Exchequer, or elsewhere, by bill, · excepting in matters concerning the king himself or his heirs. In a second charter, the same king granted the city the village of Southwark, on a yearly payment being made at the Exchequer of the yearly farms thereof. .In s third charter, he grants that merchant strangers be allowed to sell in London only according to Magna Charta. In a fourth he grants liberty for serjeants of the city to bear maces within the city. In a fifth, he grants that merchant strangers coming into the city shall board with a free host of the city, and keep houses; and that there be no brokers henceforth but what are chosen by the merchants which belong to the mystery in which they exercise office. In the same charter he grants that no stranger shall sell goods by retail, or keep any house, or be a broker in the city or suburbs. 10. Hen. IV. granted the city the custody of the gates called Newgate and Ludgate, and all other gates and posterns, with the liberty of collecting certain tolls and customs. 11. Edward IV., by his first charter, confirmed all the privileges of the city, and granted that the mayor, recorder, and such aldermen as have been mayors, shall be justices of the peace for the city and liberties, as well over land as over water; that they shall be justices of over and terminer; that the customs of the city shall be certified by word of mouth; that all inhabitants shall contribute towards the taxes. Southwark is, by this king, granted to the city in a complete manner, with all waifs, estrays, treasure trove, &c.; he also grants liberty to hold a fair three days in the year; namely, the 7th, 8th, and 9th of September. In another charter, he grants the city tonnage and the profits of weighing all wool brought into London from wheresoever. In a third charter he grants the city leave to purchase land in mortmain to a certain extent annually, in lieu of a debt which he owed to it. By a fourth, he granted (or rather sold, in consideration of 70,000L) the city the offices of packing, portage, gauging, wine-drawing, &c., and also (for 7,000L) the office of coroner, the mayor and citizens to grant the office to whomsoever they please. 12. Hen. VII. grants, that if any strangers buy wares of any one likewise a stranger, the merchandise so bought to be forfeited; that any stranger may buy goods in the gross, but not to sell again. confirms to the city the office of gauger. 13. Hen. VIII., in his first charter, grants that inquisitions be taken in London, and not, as heretofore, at St. Martin's-lane; and, in the second, he declares the keeping of the great beam and weights to belong to the city by prescription. 14. Edward VI. granted the mayor of London several pieces of landed property in Southwark, with the manor, and he also granted them the monastery of Bermondsey; he confirms the grant of the fair to be held in Southwark; and he grants leave for pleas to be holden in London of matters in Southwark; also that the mayor and citizens shall choose two coroners for Southwark, and he makes the mayor escheator and clerk of the market there. He also grants that the lord mayor, recorder, and aldermen of London, be justices of the peace in Southwark; and he gives them just the same jurisdiction there that they have in London. He guarantees the city against all exactions on account of the premises, saving the services reserved in the charter, and a fee-farm of 101. per annum. 15. James I. granted the city a charter, by which he constituted the mayor and corporation chief bailiff of the river Thames, and fixed the limits of their jurisdiction to be westward as far as Staines-bridge, and eastward as far as Yeen-Leet; he also granted them the offices of measuring all coals and grain, of salt, apples, &c., and to take the profits to their sole use. In a second charter, he granted them a full confirmation of all former charters; and he likewise determined the liberties of the city; granted the mayor and corporation leave to exact certain taxes, and that treasures found within the city, waifs, estrays, &c., should belong to it. By a third charter, he confirms the grant of weighing of all coals that come to London, and settles that it shall be done at 8d. per ton; and, by the same charter, forestalling coals and retailing in lighters are forbidden. 16. Charles I. granted a charter to the city, confirming all its former charters. He granted that the lord mayor, aldermen, and recorder, be justices, with power to commit offenders to Newgate; and moreover, that four justices, the lord mayor or recorder being always one, hold sessions to inquire into several offences against statutes, and to try indictments, according to the laws of the kingdom. He granted them the forfeitures of recognizances within the city; and also fines to the lord mayor, as chief magistrate, or as conservator of the river Thames. He granted the city Moorfields and West-Smithfield, with liberty to hold fairs and markets in those fields, with tolls and other profits. He granted it the profits of the offices of gauging and weighing within the city; and also that freemen's widows should follow their husband's occupations so long as they continued widows; that there be no market within seven miles of the city; that the customs of the city be recorded by the mouth of the recorder; that the sous of freemen be compelled to take up their freedom, and that apprentices be apprenticed for no shorter time than seven years; also that the city have a Court of Requests for the recovery of small debts, and that the officers of this court be appointed by the lord mayor and commonalty. In the same charter he grants leave to the lord mayor and commonalty to become brokers of pawns, and he fixes the fees; he also allows them to hang out signs of their respective trades; grants them the custody of Bethlehem Hospital, and he gives them leave to buy a quantity of land in mortmain. In another charter King Charles grants the mayor and commonalty the offices of package and portage, and that of scavege, in consideration of a sum of 4,200%. All that I have given above is a mere sketch of an abstract of the "Great Charter of Confirmation," which was granted in the 15th Charles II., and which embodies the whole of the charters from William I. In reading them all through, one is struck by the frequency with which the same king grants the same privilege; even, in one or two instances, over and over again; but this is accounted for by the charters having been frequently withdrawn by the king when the city had opposed him, or (more frequently) by the king's de-manding sums of money, which, when given, he repaid by a confirmation of privileges, or a grant of fresh ones. Hen. III., for instance, granted the city no less than nine charters; but the chief of them were merely confirmations of former charters, and at every grant he exacted a large sum of money. At the revolution of 1688, William and Mary granted a full confirmation of all the city's rights, and this is its last charter. When the Romans came to England, they found London the principal town of the nation, called Trinobantes, and, after driving out these, they made it the capital of their prefecture. They called it Londinum; and there seems but little doubt that they fortified it strongly; but, quitting England about the beginning of the fifth century, London again fell into the hands of the Britons, who retained possession of it, more or less, till the year 530, when a Saxon leader, Erkenwin, assumed the sovereignty of what is now Essex, Middlesex, and a part of Hertfordshire, as king of the East-Sarons, or king of Esser. In the year 596, Pope Gregory sent St. Augustine to convert the Anglo-Saxons to Christianity, and he, having succeeded in the kingdom of Kent, easily persuaded the king, Ethelbert, to suffer him to send a missionary into the territory of the king of Essex, for that kingdom was now governed by Saberct, the son of Erkenwin, and nephew of Ethelbert. Accordingly, Mellitus the abbot was sent, and soon succeeded in his mission: the king received the sacrament of baptism, and caused Mellitus to be consecrated a bishop. He also made London a bishop's see, and Mellitus the bishop. This was about the year 604, and in 610, a cathedral church was built on the site of the present St. Paul's. In the reign of Egbert, year 833, a wittengemot, or Saxon parliament, was assembled at London, to take into consideration the means of expelling the Danes, who had harassed the kingdom in several descents upon it. In 851 these Danes, in the reign of Ethelwulf, reduced and sacked the town of London amongst others. It must have been the capital of the kingdom in the reign of Alfred; for we find in the Mirror of Justices, a book written during the reign of Edw. I., that "for the estate of the realm, ALYRED caused the earls to meet, and ordained for a perpetual usage, that twice in the year, or oftener, if need were, in time of peace, they should assemble together at London, to speak their minds for the guiding of the people of God," &c. Chapter I. Section 3. This was about 890. In 1052, Edward the Confessor assembled a great council at London, to judge of the rebellion of Earl Godwin and his sons. In 1067 William the Norman came over to England, and having come to London, he began a fortress on the site of the pre-sent Tower of London, and from this time London was no doubt the metropolis of the kingdom. William Rufus augmented the fortress of his father, and is said to have built the White Tower which now stands. In 1258 a famine occurred, of which no less than 20,000 persons died; and in 1348, not less than 50,000 are said to have died in London from a pestilence which prevailed over Europe. In 1381, in the reign of Richard II., the famous rebellion of Wat Tyler and Jack Straw broke out, and was quelled in London; and in 1450, in Henry VI.'s reign, the Londoners opened the gates of the town to Jack Cade and his followers from Kent. In 1563, the plague appeared again in London, committing great havoe, but in 1665 came what goes by the name of the "great plague," in which no fewer than 100,000 persons died; and, in the very next year, broke out the fire of London, which, beginning in a baker's shop near London-bridge, raged with unabating fury for three days and nights, chasing the inhabitants from street to street, and being stopped at last by the blowing up of houses with gunpowder, but not until four hundred streets, containing in all thirteen thousand houses, were reduced to ruins, which were calculated to cover an area of about four hundred acres of ground. It burned the Guildhall, eighty-nine churches (one of which was the original St. Paul's), and four of the principal city-gates, besides hospitals and schools. So much for the city of London only. WESTMINSTER was, for many ages, entirely distinct from the city of London, and the Strand was the road leading from one to the other, having the Thames on one side and fields on the other. It was then wholly under the government, both in civil and ecclesiastical affairs, of the dean and chapter of Westminster; but, since the reformation, the civil part has been in the hands of laymen, though these are not uninfluenced by the clergy; for they elect and confirm the magistrates. The principal is the high steward, who is usually a nobleman. The next is a deputy steward. This is a kind of sheriff; for he holds the court-leet with other magistrates, and is chairman of the quarter sessions. The next is the high bailiff, who has the chief management of elections for members of parliament, and of public meetings. These are and of public meetings. These are elected or confirmed by the dean and chapter, and they hold their offices for life. There is a high constable, who has the control of all the constables; and there are sixteen bulgesses, each having a separate ward, over which he is a magistrate, much resembling the institution of aldermon in the city of London. Westminster sends two memhers to parliament, who are chosen by the householders paying scot and lot. It has no trading companies, and no courts but those of the leet, the sessions, and a court of requests. The abbey of Westminster, as an edifice and an immensely rich endowment, owes its origin to Edward the Confessor. At the reformation, the revenues of the abbey were estimated at 3,033l. 17s. yearly, a sum equal to 60,6771. of the money of the present day. The borough of South-WARK was governed by its own bailiffs up to the year 1327, in the reign of Edw. III., when it was found inconvenient to carry on the government of the two places under separate jurisdictions; so by charter it was granted (see charters above) that the mayor of London be bailiff of Southwark, to govern it by deputy. Subsequently, in 1550, Edw. VI. made a more complete grant of it to the city, placing it under the jurisdiction of the mayor, and creating it one of the city wards, under the name of the Bridge-Ward without. This borough sends two members to parliament, who are elected also by the householders paying scot and lot. London, comprising Westminster, Southwark, and the city, contained, before the reformation, 40 religious houses and hospitals, the interesting particulars of which would take up too much room for me to state here. It now contains 196 churches and chapels of ease, 11 Catholic chapels, 17 chapels of foreign Protestants, 132 meeting-houses, 22 hospitals, 107 almshouses, 20 dispensaries, besides several minor institutions for the relief of the poor and infirm. London contains the following parishes. ## MONMOUTHSHIRE

Is sounded on the North by a part of Breckpock and Herefordshire; on the East by Gloucestershire; on the Southeast by the Severn sea or Bristol channel, and on the West by Glamorganshire and part of Brecknockshire. It- is thirty three miles in length, and twentyaix in breadth. It has six hundreds:
Abergavenny, Caldicot, Ragland, Skenfreth, Uake, Wentloog. The principal rivers of this county are, the Weet, the Severa, the Uske, the Rumney, the Mon-now, and the Ebwy. The market-towns are, Abergavenny, Caerleon, Chepstow Monmouth, Newport, Pontypool, and Uske. This county sends three members to parliament; two for the county itself, and one for the borough. It is in the Pro-VINCE OF CANTERBURY, partly in the DIOCESE OF LLANDAFF, partly in that. of HEREFORD, and partly in that of St. DAVID'S, and in the OXFORD CIRCUIT. Monmouthshire contains 498 square miles, or 318,720 acres, and 125 parishes. It had 13 monastic establishments, and 10 public charities; it has 3 parishes with no church; 21 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants; 69 parishes with no parsonage-house; 30 perishes with personage-houses unfit to live in; the POOR-RATES were, in 1818, 41,0271. 16s. 24d., the number of paupers is 4,122; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 295,097 l. Sc. 6d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 71,835; the number of inhabited houses in 1821 was 13,211; the number of uninhabited houses at the same epoch, 520; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-seventh of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 3; the poorrates, in 1776, were 50,433l.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 145; the number of acres to a person, 4; the number of acres to a house, 24; the male population, in 1821, was 37,278; the families employed in agriculture were in number 6,020; the families employed in handicraft were 6,147 in number; the number of other families was 1,955; the agricultural male population, 15,884; able labourers, 7,949; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer is 40. This is as hilly a county as any in England; indeed, it is all hill and dale; generally very beautiful, and, in many parts, very productive. The wastes are numerous, and some of them large; that of Greenmore contains about 5,000 acres; Caldicot about 800; besides those f Devaudon, Chepstow, and others. The southern part of the county consists of large tracts of moor and marsh lands, containing, in some parts, great depths of rich land, and, in other parts, a black peaty earth. Another division of it consists of a mixture of day-loam, forming fertile meadows in the valleys, with a good red soil on the higher ground, excellent for the growth of corn. In the eastern part of the county, extending along the course of the river Uske, the soil is of a faint-red colour, and fortile as a garden. The third division of the county is the western, a hilly, or, rather, mountainous district, the soil upon the hills being of a thin, peaty nature, with stone underneath, or coals, and iron ore. The low grounds in this district are marshy, and the midland is either cultivated in corn, or is in good woodland. Nothing can be more beautiful then a great part of this county. The horned cattle of Monmouthty. The horned cattle of Monmouth-shire are of good size, short-legged, and compact in the carcass. They are sent into the other counties of England, to fatten, in great numbers. The sheep are of two kinds; in the low lands the Ryeland breed is found; but, on the hills, quite another sort, a slender, long-legged, rough-woolled, active animal, the only kind fitted for such a district, and, though not producing much, yet producing good mutton. The horses are slender and unserviceable, but the mules of this county are the best of any bred in England; they are larger and handsomer, and very often bring good prices. There are extensive mines of cost and iron in Monmouthshire; and manufacturing of flannel, coarse cloths, woollen stockings, knit-caps, &cc. is carried on in many parts of it.

It is in the Province of Canter-BURY, in the DIOCESE OF NORWICH, and in the Nonrolk Cincuit. Non-FOLK is a very flat county, there being scarcely any rising ground even, excepting a little about Cremer, and a little in the neighbourhood of Norwich. Mr. ARTHUR YOUNG, made an analysis of the land of the county of Norfolk: of light sand he found 140,000 acres ; good sand 268,800; marshland clay 58,400; various loams 576,000 ; rich loam 94,720 ; peat 52,480. It has been for some years considered the first county in En for its agriculture ; that is to say, for its growth of corn crops, for as a grazing county, or sheep-fatting county, it is far beneath many. Its principal produce is, wheat, barley, and oats; and of barley more than of the other two. woodlands are no-where extensive here. unless where gentlemen have planted, though, in some districts, the hedgerows are thick, and give the country the appearance of being wooded. greater part of the county is open, and the fields extensive. The cattle of Norfolk are not fine, the horses are hardy and active, and well calculated for the soil, but they are not handsome; the horned cattle are chiefly brought out of Suffolk, the polled breed of which county is much esteemed; the sheep is a long, bony, horned snimal, with black feet and face, with some fine wood upon it, but with a worthless careass compared with the excellent breed now in vogue. There are no mines in this county. Manufacturing of tabinet, crapes, camblets, hombesines, popline, damasks, shawls, and fancy things of mohair and silk, is carried on to a very great extent in the city of Norwich; and a considerable trade in stockings and coarse woollens is carried on at Aylsham and Thetford.

NORWICH, is the chiefcity of the Eastern side of England. It is situated on a gently-rising hill which runs parallel with the river Wensum on its Western side; and it is 109 miles N.E. by -N. from London. Norwich is stated by some historians to have been founded by the Britons, and others state it to have been founded by Julius Cæsar; but both these accounts are strongly doubted, and it is rather thought to have been no town till the time of the Saxons, when, under the name of Northwic (which, in the Saxon tongue, means a station, or costle, in the North), it was founded. The number of Saxon coins bearing the name of Northwic, and found within Norwich and its neighbourhood, tend to authenticate this etymology. It is supposed that the Saxons began this town immediately on their coming over into England, and that they built a strong castle there in 540. Further suppositions are that, in the year 642, it became the royal seat of Anna, the seventh East-Anglian king. From this time, to that of Alfred, it was alternately possessed by the Saxons and Danes. In 670 it was in the possession of Ingwar, a Danish chief. Alfred, possessing it, repaired the remparts and walls. In 1004 it fell into the hands of Sweyne, king of Denmark. He was driven out, but in 1010 the Danes returned and settled there; and, a few years after, in 1018, the castle appears to have been strongly rebuilt by Camute, who entrusted the custody of it to Turkil, one of his followers. The government of this fortress afterwards was given to Harold, who, on his usurpation of the throne of England, appointed Leofric, a Saxon thane, to the command. William I. gave to Ralph de Waher the earldom of Norfolk. and he gave him the castle for his residence; but De Waher joining in the rebellion of the Earl of Northumberland, he retreated to his castle of Norwich, and that being besieged, he withdrew into Normandy. The castle and earldom then remained in the crown; and the king, in 1077, granted them to Roger Bigod, another of his followers; and this Bigod is said to have materially altered the castle, and to have built the keep-tower, which is now standing. In the reign of King John, we find that one Hugh Bigod was expelled from this castle; and in 1240 the custody of it was granted to Hamon Passlow, to hold during the king's pleasure. In the reign of Henry III., Louis of France sent troops to assist the Barons, and Norwich was besieged by them and com-pelled to capitulate. In the reign of Edward II. the honour of the Earldom of Norwich is reported to have been 120 knights fees, or 85,000 acres From this circumstance we may judge of the extent of power placed in the hands of such an earl. But very soon after this time, the power of these nobles was very much abridged, and, at Norwich, the sheriff was empowered to use the castle as a prison. In 1336 a considerable number of Flemings came over from their own country and settled at Worstead near Norwich, and there they introduced the manufacture of that sort of goods, which being quickly introduced at Norwich also, became one of great importance, and soon increased the population and the wealth of the town. In 1403, a charter of incorporation was granted to it, which has been several times resumed, re-granted, and enlarged. It has suffered much several times, like almost all the other cities, from sieges, fires, and plagues; but the circumstance of its having been, from the earliest time, so successful in its manufactures, seems to have given it a power of quickly re-establishing both population and wealth. In 1566, a number of Dutch Walloons came over, baving received great encouragement to settle in England, and landing at Yarmouth, they came to Norwich, and there introduced the invention of bombazines; which, being greatly improved upon from that time, gave rise to the endless variety of manufactures now known as Norwich stuffs. Queen Elizabeth in 1578 rested several days at Norwich during her progress through the country. In the Civil Wars it declared for the parliament, and was occupied by its troops. Its charter was however renewed by Charles II. in 1663; it was resumed by James II., but regranted in 1688, and agreeably to this, it is now governed by a mayor, recorder, steward, 2 sheriffs, 24 aldermen, 60 common-councilmen, and other officers. Norwich first became a bishop's see in 1094, and it was established then by Hubert de Losinge, who laid the foundation-stone of the cathedral; and it is said that the present choir with its aisles, and the transept and tower, were erected by him; that Eborard, his successor, added the nave with its two sisles. It was damaged by fire in 1171, and John of Oxford, the fourth bishop, repaired it. In an insurrection between the citizens and the monks in 1272, it was much damaged by fire, and the citizens were fined 3000 marks to cover the expenses of repairing it. At various other times subsequent to this, it has undergone great repairs, but it is still observed to be, for the greater part, of Norman architecture. In the reign of Edward III., there were in this city 58 churches, besides the cathedral and the chapels attached to the following religious houses: namely, St. Leonard's Benedictine Cell, founded on a hill near the city, by Bishop Herbert; granted, 5 Elis., to the Duke of Norfolk. Kairo, or Cairo, a Benedictine Nunnery, endowed in the year 1146 by King Stephen; yearly value at the Reformation, 86l. 12s. 14d., now worth 1,6921. 2s. 6d.; granted, in the 30th Hen. VIII., to Doctor Miles Spenser. St. Giles's Hospital, founded in the year 1249, by Walter, bishop of Norwich, rents 901. 12s., now worth 1,812l. yearly. Lazar's Houses: several of them founded here for the poor; granted to Edmond Newport. An Augustine Friary, settled here in the time of Edward I.; granted, by Edward VI., to Sir Thomas Heneage and to William Lord Willoughby. The Black Friary, founded by Sir Thomas Gelham, in the year 1226; granted, 32 Hen. VIII., to the mayor and citizens. The House of Grey Friers, founded in the year 1226, by John de Hastingford ; granted, 30 Hen. VIII., to the Duke of Norfolk. The White, or Carmelite Friary, founded, in the year 1256, by Philip Congate of Norwich; granted, 34 Hen. VIII., to Richard Andrews and Leonard Chamberlayne. There are now 35 churches besides the cathedral; but there are many chapels of dissenters. The trade of Norwich is very considerable, both from its agricultural neighbourhood, and from its own internal manufactures; the latter has been carried on from time immemorial, originating in wool-combing and manufacturing, and subsequently having added to it the manufactures above-mentioned. So early as the time of Hen. VIII. the yearly value of the Norwich manufactories and those of its neighbourhood, was estimated at 200,0001., and the number of hands employed on them 120,000. The city now contains 12 charity schools, an infirmary, hospital, and bedlam, and a county hospital. The houses are well built, and large, particularly those on the outside of the town; and the streets, though many of them are narrow, are well paved and well lighted. It is a truly fine town, and the walks round the castle ramparts are pleasant and very commanding. Its parishes, 39 in number, are as follows: All-Saints, St. Andrew, St. Augustine, St. Benedict, St. Clement, St. Mary Earlham, St. Andrew Eaton, St. Edmund, St. Etheldred, St. George-Collegiate, St. George-Tombland, St. Giles, St. Gregory, Heigham, St. Helen, St. John, Madder-Market, St. John-Sepulchre, St. James, St. Julian-Lakenham, St. Lawrence, St. Margaret, St. Martin-at-Palace, St. Martin-at-Oak, St. Mary, St. Michael-Coslaney, St. Michael-at-Plea, St. Michael-at-Thorne, St. Paul, St. Peter-Hungate, St. Peter-Mancroft, St. Peter-Hungate, St. Feter-mancrott, St. Feter-per-Mountergate, St. Peter-Southgate, St. Saviour, St. Simon, St. Jude, St. Stephen, St. Swithin, St. John-the-Baptist, Timberhill, Trinity or St.

Mary-in-the-Marsh, besides the united parishes of Trowse, Carrow, and Bracondale, and part of those of Hellesdon and St. Andrew-Thorpe. The whole population is 50,288. It sends 2 members to parliament, the right of election being in the freeholders and in such freemen as are entered in the books and do not receive alms: number of voters, about 3,000. It has a market on Wed., Fri., and Sat.; fairs, the day before Good-Fri., Easter-Mon, and Tues.; Whit-Mon. and Tues., horses, aheep, lambs, and petty chapmen.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

An Inland County, nearly in the centre of England, bounded on the North by Leicestershire, Rutlandshire, and Lincolnshire; on the East by Cambridgeshire, Huntingdon, and Bedfordshire; on the South by Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire; and, on the West, by Oxfordshire and Warwickshire. It is nearly 60 miles long, and from eight to 22 miles broad. It is divided into 19 hundreds; namely, Chipping-Warden, Clely, Corby, Fawsley, Green's-Norton, Guilsborough, Hamsfordshoe, Higham-Ferrers, Huxloe, King's-Sutton, Navisford, Nobottle-Grove, Orlingbury, Polebrook, Rothwell, Spelhoe, Tow-cester, Willybrook, Wymesley. The cester, Willybrook, Wymesley. The principal RIVER of this county is the Nen, or Nyne. There are 12 MARKET-TOWNS; Brackley, Daventry, Higham-Ferrers, Kettering, Northampton, Oundle, Peterborough, Rockingham, Rothwell, Thrapston, Towcester, Welling-borough. The county returns 9 members to parliament; 2 for the shire, 2 for the city of Peterborough, 2 for each of the boroughs of Northampton and Brackley, and 1 for Higham-Ferrers. This county contains 1017 square miles, or $50,880 acres; and 306 parishes. It had 31 monastic estublishments, and 58 public charities; it has 1 parish with no church; 16 parishes with less than a hundred inhabitants; 16 parishes with no parsonage-houses; 38 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in. POOR-RATES Were, in 1818. 175,9551. 14s. 94d.; the number of PAUPERS is 16,043; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 942,1611. 15s. 4dd.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 162,483; the number of inhabited houses, in 1821, was 32,503; the number of uninhabited houses at the same epoch was 527; the poorrates bear the proportion of one-fifth compared with the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 2; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 64,6321.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 150; the number of acres to a person, 4; the number of acres to a house, 26. The male population, in 1821, was 79,575; the families employed in agriculture were in number 18,974; the families employed in handicraft were 11,695 in number; the number of other families was 4,883; the agricultural male population, 20,370; able labourers. 10.185; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer is, therefore, 63. It is in the Paovince of Canterbury, partly in the Diocese or Petersonough, and partly in that of Lincoln; and in the MIDLAND CIRcuit. This is a straggling, long district of land, having on the South-Eastern side of it, Buckinghamshide, Bedfordshire, Huntingdonshire, and Cambridgeshire, and on the North-Western side of it, Oxfordshire, Warwickshire, Leicestershire, Rutlandshire, and Lin-colsabire. It is neither a hilly nor a flat county, but consists generally of gently-rising ground. The quality of its soil is various, but for the most part consists of a rich, though rather light loam. The most prevalent system of husbandry in this county is that of grazing; but still great breadths of land are constantly under the plough. The woodlands are still considerable in Northamptonshire; as the forests of Rockingham, in the northern part of the county; those of Whittlewood and Selsey, in the southern part; and the chases of Geddington and Yardley. These have been curtailed in every reign almost since that of King John, before whose time they were very extensive. Rockingham forest still extends nearly twenty miles in length. The cattle of Northamptonshire are of a good qualtity, large in the carcass and of great depth, good as dairy animals, and profitable for grazing; the sheep are very much crossed with the new breed of the neighbouring county, Leicestershire. There are no mines of any kind in the county. The manufactures of the county are, at Northampton, making shoes for the London shoesellers, at Kettering and other places in the northern part of the county are some woollen manufactures, and at Towcester and the villages surrounding, lace-making is carried on very extensively.,

PETERBOROUGH (City), is in the Province of Canterbury, distant 814 miles N.N.W. from London, and 44 miles N.E. from Northampton. It is situated on the river Nen, in the liberty, or soke, of Peterborough, formerly Medehampsted. The neighbourhood partakes of the flatness of the fenny countries adjoining; but, being divided by live hedges, it forms an assemblage of the most luxuriant water-meadows that I ever beheld; just like those near Huntingdon, and not inferior, either in beauty or richness, to the meadows on the banks of the Severn, in Worcestershire. The town itself is small, and though ancient, clean. It has one principal street, with several smaller ones intersecting this; and it has a good market-house and a good church, besides its exquisitely beautiful cathedral. This last, I have great pleasure in saying, is, contrary to the more magnificent pile at Ely, kept in good order. It is of Norman architecture, and singularly handsome of its kind. This is not, however, that ancient building of which we read in the history of the Anglo-Saxons; for the foundation of Peterborough was laid by Peads, the son of Pends, a Saxon king, in the year 656. He began, and caused to be endowed, a large monastery, of which it is said, that the walls were constructed of stones so large that it took eight oxen to draw one. In 868, the Danes attacked and destroyed this, amongst other places. They slaughtered the Abbot and his Monks, and the women and children who had fled to the monastery for protection. They then sacked it and burned it to the ground. In 970, however, Athel-wold, bishop of Winchester, restored it by the assistance of Edgar and his queen; and, from Medehampsted, its name was changed to Gildenburgh (Golden-city), from its riches; and again from that to Peterborough, in honour of the saint to whom it was dedicated. It became a celebrated and extremely rich monastery, but it was once more pillaged and partly destroyed by the Danes. In 1116 it was nearly destroyed by fire; so that, in 1118, a new church was begun under the auspices of the Abbot, John de Salisbury, and this was the origin of the present cathedral, which was finished in 1144, under Martin de Vesci. It is the burial-place of that ill-used woman and honour to womankind, Catherine, queen of the ferocious tyrant Henry VIII. To the infamy of that ruffian, and the shame of after ages, there is no monument to record her virtues and her sufferings; and the remains of this daughter of the wise Ferdinand. and of the generous Isabella, who sold her jewels to enable Columbus to discover the new world, lie under the floor of the cathedral, commemorated by a short inscription on a plate of brass. All men, protestants or not protestants, feel as I feel upon this subject : search the hearts of the bishop, and of his dean and chapter, and these feelings are there; but to do justice to the memory of this illustrious victim of tyranny would be to cast a reflection on that event to which they owe their rich possessions. From this cause, and no other, it is that the memory of the virtuous CATHERINE is unblazoned, while that of the tyrannical, the cruel, and the immoral Elizabeth, is recorded with all possible veneration, and all possible varnishing-over of her disgusting amours and endless crimes. They relate, at Peterborough, that the same sexton who buried Queen Catherine, also buried here Mary Queen of Scots. The remains of the latter, of very questionable virtue, or, rather, of unquestionable vice, were removed to Westminster-abbey, by her son, James I.; but those of the virtuous queen were suffered to remain unhonoured! Good God! what injustice, what a want of principle, what hostility to all virtuous feeling! The tyrant whose wife lies buried here, seized upon the monastery and church in 1539, and pensioned off the abbot at 260l. a year; and, in 1541, he made Peterborough a bishop's see, giving the government of it to a bishop, a dean, and six prebendaries. The revenues he divided into three shares, one for himself, one for the bishop, and the other for the dean and chapter. The river Nen is navigable for 40 miles above Peterborough, and, therefore, the trade carried on in corn, timber, and other produce of the soil, is consider-The only manufacture carried on in the town is that of stockings. The city is governed by a mayor, six aldermen, and a common-council chosen out of the principal inhabitants. The soke of Peterborough is a jurisdiction extending over thirty-two towns and hamlets in the neighbourhood, and the magistrates who rule over it are appeby the king, and they have the same power as judges of assise. They sit quarterly for the purpose of hearing and determining civil suits, and also for This city that of the jail delivery. sends two members to parliament; 'the right of voting being in those who pay scot and lot, and the number of voters 400. Its population is 4,598. Fairs, July 10, and Oct. 2, for horses, stock of all sorts, and timber. Market on Saturday. The population of the city is 4,598, but the parish of St. John-the-Baptist, which is in fact the city of Peterborough, extends beyond the limits of the city, and contains altogether 5,S15 inhabitants.

NORTHUMBERLAND.

A Northern County, bounded on the North by Berwickshire in Scotland; on the East by the German Ocean; on the South by the county of Durham; on the West by the counties of Roxburgh in Scotland, and by Cumberland. It is 62 miles in length, and about 42 in breadth. It is divided into six wards, Bamborough, Castle, Coquet-dale, Glendale, Morpeth, and Tindale, The principal RIVERS of this county are, the Tyne, the Blyth, the Wansbeck, the Coquet, the Alne, and the Tweed. The MARKET-TOWNS are, Allendale, Alnwick, Belford, Berwick, Bollingham, Coldstream, Corbridge, Hexham, Haltwhistle, Morpeth, Newcastle, North Shields, Rothbury, Wooler, North-VMBERLAND sends eight members to parliament; two for the County, two for Newcastle, two for Morpeth, and two for Berwick. It is in the Province OF YORK, in the DIOCESE OF DUR-HAM, and in the NORTHERN CIRCUIT. It contains 1871 square miles, or 1,197,440 acres; and 88 parishes. "hed 95 monastic establishments, and 15 public charities; it has 5 parishes with no churches; 1 parish with less than 100 inhabitants; 31 parishes with no parsonage-houses; 8 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in; the Poon-RAPES were, in 1818, 99,3731. 3s. 64d.; the number of paupers 13,164; the rental of the county, according to a return made to the parliament in 1818, was, 1,740,5941. 94. 7d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 198,965; the number of inhabited houses in 1821 was, 31,526; the number of uninhabit. ed houses at the same epoch, 1.106; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-twelfth of the rental; the number of paupers compared with the number of houses, is one to every two; the poor-rates in 1776, were 14,085; the number of persons to every square mile of this county, is 106; the number of acres to a person, 6; the number of acres to a house, 36; the male population in 1821, was 95,354; the families employed in agriculture were in number

11,566; the families employed in handicraft were 20,560 in number; the number of other families was 10,996. The agricultural male population 25,577; able labourers 12,788; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer is 93. The appearance of this county is as various as possible, being a continued dead flat all along the sea coast, from Tynemouth to Berwick; then, at a distance from the sea, rising in gentle swells, and, in the whole of the Western side of it, from Wooler to Allendale, being decidedly mountain-By drawing a line kond Berwick to Hexham, and then again from Hexham to North Shields, you have on the East, the fertile and well-cultivated low-land district; and all on the West of this is a mountainous district, in great part barren. The soil of both these districts is nevertheless very various. That on the Eastern part of the county has some barren heaths, some sandy, and some clayey spots; the valley of Hexham being considered its richest part. In the mountainous district, though the characteristic is bleakness and want of fertility, yet this is not altogether unaccompanied by spots of considerable fertility. The Cheviot hills, for in-attrace, a district extending from Wooler for some miles in a southerly direction, are colebrated for the excellence of their pasturage. The rotation of crops in the Eastern part of the county is turnips, barley, or wheat; clover for two years; oats. This is varied according as the land is strong or light. In the Western district, three years' tillage, and then three years' grass, is a very common mode of cropping. The cattle mostly used in Northumberland are a shorthorned breed called the Dutch. sheep are of three breeds, the Dishley, or long-wooled, in the low-land districts; the Cheviot, on the hills of Chewiot, and the Heath breed, peculiarly scaptes to the page barren of the mountains. There are extensive lead-mines in the neighbourhood of Allendale, Shielden, Fallowfield, and Little-Houghton; but the great article of commerce of the county, is in that of coals. The district of this county that is most fertile in coal, is that extending along the sea coast from North Shields to the mouth of the Aln (near to Alnwick), and taking in some miles from the coast all the way, but getting broader as you approach North Shields. The extent of the coal fields is estimated at 300 acres; and the quantity of coal shipped to London from Newcastle was, in 1700, estimated at 300,000 chaldrons annually. principal manufacture of Northumberland is of glass, ware, which is carried on to a great extent on the Tyne, there being no fewer than eight-and-twenty glass-works on that river, and at no great distance from its mouth.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.

An inland County, bounded on the North by Yorkshipe; on the West by Derbyshire; on the East by Lincolnshire, and on the South, by Leicestershire. It is about 50 miles in length, and 25 in breadth. It is divided into six hundreds: Rushchef, Bingham, and New-tark, on the south side of the Trent; Basset-Law (subdivided into North and South-Clay, and Hatfield divisions), Broxton, Thurgarton, on the North of the Trent. The principal rivers of this county are, the Trent, the Erewash, the Soar, and the Idle. The markettowns are Bawtry, Blyth, Bingham, Mansfield, Newark, Nottingham, Oilerton, Southwell, Tuxford, Worksop. Nottinghamshire returns eight members to parliament; two for the county, and two for each of the boroughs of Nottingham, Newark, and Retford. It is in the Province or York, in the Diocres or York, and in the Min-LAND CIRCUIT. It contains 857 square miles, or 535,680 acres, and 712 parishes. It had 27 monastic establishments, and 35 public charities; it has 2 parishes with no church, 11 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants, 42 psrishes with no parsonage-houses, pariabes with personage houses unfit to live in: the Posa-Rates were, in 1418, 130,5261. 1s. 74d.; the number of PAUPERS is 12,187; the rental of the county, according to a return laid before parliament in 1818, was 737,2291.12s. &d.: the population, according to a return made to parliament in 1821, was 186,873; the number of inhabited houses in 1821 was $5,022; the number of uninhabited houses at the same epoch, 859; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-afth of the rental; the number; of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is one to every three; the poorrates in 1776 were 11,665l.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 233; the number of acres to s person, 2; the number of scres to a house, 15; the male population, in 1821, was 91,491; the families employed in agriculture were 13,664 in number : the families employed in handicraft were 21,832 in number; the number of other families was 3,107; the agricultural male population, S2,384; able labourers, 16,192; the number of scres in this county to every able-bodied labourer, is 33. This is an extremely fertile county: its general aspect is that of a series of gentle risings, not of sufficient height to he colled hills; and yet it is sourcely divisions are, sand, or sand and gravel, clay, and limestone; but, of course, there are other kinds of soil, and many other kinds to be found intermixed with these. The crops are the same as in the generality of corn counties, and there is nothing peculiar in the manner of producing these. The horned cattle fed in this county are of the Irish breed; and the sheep either the Dishley, or longwooled, or the Forest breed, the latter being the native sheep of the county, and deriving its name from the immerse forest of Sherwood. The county is not so famous for the breed of any race of animals as it is for that of pigeons, of which immense numbers are sold at the The manufactures of the county are, silks at Nottingham, and stockings at Nottingham and other places in the county; malt at Notting-ham, Newark, and Mansfield; and earthenware at Sutton-in-Ashfield. It has no mines.

OXFORDSHIRE.

AN ISTAND COUNTY, bounded on the Northeast by Northamptonshire; on the East by Buckinghamshire; on the South by Berkshire; and on the West by Gloucestershire. Its greatest length is about 55 miles; but it is so irregular that, while, in one direction its breadth is nearly 40 miles, in another it is not more than 7. It is divided into 14 hundreds, Bampton, Banbury, Binfield, Bloxham, Bullington, Chadlington, Dorchester, Ewelme, Langtree, Lewknor, Pirton, Ploughley, Thame, and Wootton. The principal rivers are, the Thame, the Isis, the Charwell, the Evenlode, and the Windrush. The market-towns are, Bampton, Banbury, Bicester, Burford, Chipping-Norton. Deddington, Healey, Oxford, Thame, Wallingford, Watlington, Witney, Woodstock. Oxfordshire sends 9 members to parliament; 2 for the county, 2 for the city of Oxford, 2 for the University, 2 for Woodstock, and 1 for Banbury. It is in the Pro-VINCE OF CANTERBURY, greater part in the Diocese or Oxford, and is the first town on the Oxford Circuit. It contains 752 square miles, or 481,280 acres, and 217 parishes. It had 46 acres, and 217 parishes. It had 46 monastic establishments, and 36 public charities; it has 2 parishes with no churches; 18 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants; 40 parishes with no parsonage-houses; 40 parishes in which the parsonage-houses are unfit to dwell in; the poor-rates were, in 1818, 170,0581. 14s.; the number of paupers is 15,576; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 713,1471. 7s. 41d.; the population, according to a sours made | to parliament in 1821, was 136,971; the number of inhabited houses in 1821 was 25,594; the number of uninhabited houses at the same epoch, 513; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-fourth of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the numher of houses, is 1 to every 2; the poorrates, in 1776, were 28,1311.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 182; the number of acres to a person, 3; the number of acres to a house, 19; the male population, in 1821, was 68,817; the families employed in agriculture were 15,965 in number; the families employed in handicraft were 8,971 in number; the number of other families was 3,905; the agricultural male population, 38,094; able labourers, 19,047; the number of acres in this county to every able-hodied labourer is 35. This county is, in its southern district, that is, from Henley to Witney, a pleasant country of hill and dale; of chalky seil, growing fine crops of corn, having good pastures (particularly on the banks of the Thames), and growing excellent beech timber. In the upper, or northern, parts of the county, beginning at Whitney, Woodstock, and Bicester, the land is a chalky loam, the hills high and bleak, with few pastures, and with no timber to any account but beech. This is an open country, or, at least, enclosed only by stone walls; a disagreeable one to the eye, but exceedingly productive of corn. There is but little waste land in this county, that of Otmoor, near Islip, and some appertaining to Whichwood Forest, are the two most extensive tracts. The Herefordshire oxen, and the Leicestershire cows, are the two sorts of horned cattle most preferred in Oxfordsbire, and, as it has no peculiar breed of sheep, on the high-lands the cotswold sheep are mostly fed, and in the lower lands, the Southdown. The manufactures of this county are very limited, both in extent and importance. Whitney has long had a manufacture of blankets, which it formerly carried on to a much larger extent than it does at present. Woodstock has those of polished steel, and leather breeches and gloves: Bloxham and Banbury have a little manufacturing of velvet; Thame, a little of silk; but Henley carries on a considerable business in malting, and supplies London with a great quantity of malt. There are no mines in the county.

OXFORD is seated in a vale of beautiful and luxuriant water meadows, with a range of hills at a little distance from it, forming a sweep nearly all round it. It is 545 miles W.N.W. from Loudon; is, including its suburbs, about one mile and a quarter from East to West, and nearly the same from North to South; is surrounded on the East, West and South, by the two very pretty rivers, the Isis and the Charmell; and is an ancient-looking, beautiful town, the buildings solid, nearly all of stone, and the main streets spacious and well paved and lighted. Fabulous history makes Oxford a town 1000 years before the Christian era, ascribing the founding of it to Memprick, a British king, who named it after himself. It is said to have been afterwards called Rhid-Ychen, a name meaning in the British dialect, the same as Ozenford, which was the name afterwards given it and by which we find it described in the Doomsday Survey. It does not appear to have been a place of very great consequence till the time of Altred, who built three halls, or colleges, there in 886. He then assembled some learned men together, among whom was Grymbald, and John the Monk, and settled them at Oxford to superintend the colleges; but there was, before this, a college at Oxford; for, upon Grymbald and his associates introducing new statutes and regula-tions for the conducting of the new colleges, we read that great resistance was offered to them by the old scholars, and the strife between the parties went to such a height, that the king himself went to Oxford to act as umpire. Having settled, as he thought, the dispute, he left it, but the old students continued their opposition to Grymbald till he retired to Winchester in despair. The halls built by Alfred were called the Great, Little, and Less Halls, and the three now form-what is called University College, the most ancient of all now standing. In the reign of Ethelred, the city and college were sacked, and partly consumed by fire, by the Danes, and they were scarcely repaired before Harold, in 1036, being incensed against the students, banished them. They were recalled, however, by Edward the Confessor. William I., wishing to abolish the English tongue, was opposed by the clergy and the students, and for this he stopped the stipends granted them by King Alfred; and, shortly after this, they and the citizens joining in a rebellion against William, he besieged the city, took it and gave it up to plunder. It is supposed that he then surrounded it with a wall, and the North-gute and some other fragments of his fortification still remain. In the reign of King John, the magistrates of Oxfordshire having, without trial, hanged three priests, or scholars, for a murder of which they were supposed innocent, the students all deserted the place, and dividing, went to Reading, Salisbury, Maidstone, and Cambridge; by which means the place became so impoverished that it sent deputies to the pope's legate at Westminster to beg pardon on their knees, and they submitted to do penance. The students therefore returned to Oxford. It appears to have been allowed the rank of University in the year In 1349 a dreadful plague ravaged it. In the reign of Edward III., several parliaments were held there. Henry V. was partly educated at Oxford, and is said to have intended to add to its foundations. At the beginning of Henry VIII.'s reign, he confirmed the charters of the University and shortly after paid it a visit. But, by assuming to himself the title of head of the church, and by the unequivocal signs of his intentions towards the church property which he soon after displayed, he drove away more students than the plague had everdone. He confiscated and granted to laymen, the chief religious houses in Oxford. The colleges, however, were suffered to remain as they were, and great pains was taken to encourage the students to return. Cardinal Wolsey erected a new college; and Henry made the Abbey of Osceney, near Oxford, a cathedral, and the county a diocese; but when Wolsey had completed his college of Christ's Church, the cathedral church was translated to the town of Oxford, until which it was not properly a city. In Edward VI.'s reign, a commission was appointed to examine the state of the colleges, and they either directed or allowed a pillaging of their libraries, in which many valuable books were burned, and the colleges became again deserted. the accession of Mary, many of the students returned, but the death of Mury again dispersed them, and from the year 1560, for several years scarcely any use was made of the colleges, and there were but two University preachers, who both retired and left the pulpit vacant. In 1566, Queen Elizabeth visited Oxford, and the magnificence with which she was treated by the university, shows that it was then reviving. In the thirteenth year of her reign, an act was passed to incorporate it. James I. resided some time at Oxford on account of the plague which was in Loudon; but the disorder reaching Oxford itself, he was obliged to quit it, with its citizens and students. In the reign of Charles I., the plague being still in London, the king held a parliament at Oxford; and to this place he fled when assailed by the parliament which ultimately dethroned him. The colleges suffered a good deal from the ransacking of the parliament forces, and Cromwell became Chancellor of the University. On the Restoration, the University was placed on its former basis. In 1681, Charles II. beld a parliament in Oxford. The statutes under which the University acts as a corporate body, received the approbation of Charles 1. The officers by whom it is immediately governed, are, a chancellor, high-steward, vicechancellor, and two proctors. The chancellor is usually a nobleman of high rank, the high-steward is chosen by him, and is also a man of high rank, and, like the chancellor, retains his office for life. The university consists of twenty colleges and five halls; namely, ALL-Souls college, founded in 1437, by Henry Chichele, Archbishop of Canterbury. Balliol College, founded by John Balliol, of Barnard-Castle, Durham, in the reign of Henry III. BRAZEN-NOSE COLLEGE, founded in 1509, by William Smyth, Bishop of Lincoln. Corpus-Christi College, founded by Richard Fox, Bishop of Winches-CHRIST'S - CHURCH COLLEGE, founded by Cardinal Wolsey. EXETER COLLEGE, founded in 1315, by Walter de Stapledon, Bishop of Exeter. HERTFORD COLLEGE, founded by Bishop Stapledon. Jasus College, tounded by Queen Elizabeth. LINCOLN COL-LLOE, founded by Richard Flemmyzge, Bishop of Lincoln. MAGDALEN COL-LEGE, founded by William of Wainfleet. MERTON COLLEGE, founded in the reign of Henry III., by Walter de Merton, Bishop of Rochester. New College, founded in 1879, by William of Wyke-ham, Bishop of Winchester. Osser. College, founded in 1315, by Adam de Brom, rector of Hanworth, Middlesex. PERSEORE COLLEGE, founded early in the seventeenth century, out of the contributions of two wealthy, zealous men, Thomas Tesdale and Richard Wightwick. Queen's College, founded by Robert Eglefield, confessor to the Queen of Edward III., in 1340. Sr. Jonn's Coulon, founded in the fifteenth century, by Sir Thomas White, a London merchant. Transvy Col-LEGE, founded in 1554, by Sir Thomas Pepe. University College, founded in 1249, by William of Durham. Won-CREVER COLLEGE, founded in the time of Elizabeth, by Sir Thomas White, but endowed principally by Sir Thomas Cookes, of Worcesternbire. WADHAM COLLEGE, founded by Nicholas Wadham, of Someretshire. The Halls are ave in number; namely, St. Alban's HALL, deriving its name from Sancto Albans, a citizen of Oxford in the time of King John. EDMUND HALL, so termed from St. Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury. Sr. MARY'S HALL, given by the burgesses of Oxford in the reign of Henry III., to the rectors of St. Mary's church, for a house of residence. St. MARY MAGDALEN HALL, close to Magdalen College, built in 1480, by William Waynfleet, as a grammar school. New-Inn Hall, were premises bestowed by William of Wykeham, on the warders of New College, and they acquired the name of The old monastic institu-New Hall. tions of Oxford were, St. Frideswides, a Nunnery founded in 730, by King Didamus, for his own daughter. This Numery was suppressed by a Bull of Pope Clement VII., and the site and lands granted to Cardinal Wolsey, whereon he founded his college of Christ-church. A Convent of BLACK FRIARS was established in the parish of St. Ebb, in the year 1261, under the protection of Henry III., and an establishment of GREY FRIARS was brought to the same place about the same time. Both of these were dissolved by Henry VIII., and their possessions were granted to Richard Andrews and John A CARMELITE FRIARY WAS established about the year 1310, by King Edward II.; but was dissolved and its lands granted to Edward Souri, by King Henry VIII. There were also a society of Crouched Friers, Friers de Sacco, and Trinitarian Friary for the redemption of captives; but these were either altogether suppressed, or were annexed to other religious houses, before the Reformation.-Oxford has no manufactures, and its trade is principally owing to the great number of scholars constantly resident in the colleges. The city is governed by a mayor, highuteward, recorder, four aldermen, eight assistants, two bailitis, a town chirk, two chamberlains, and twenty-four common-councilmen. It sends four members to parliament; two for the city, who are elected by about 1,600 veters, being the mayor, magistrates, common-council, and freemen; and two for the university, who are elected by the Doctors and actual masters of arts, generally about 1,200. It contains the following parishes: St. Aldate, All-Saints, St. Ebbe, St. Giles, Holywell, St. Marythe-Virgin, St. Mary Magdalem, St. Martin, St. Michael, St. Peter-le-Bailey, St. Peter-in-the-East, and St. Thomas. The popula. is 16,364. The markets are on Wednesday and Saturday, and the fairs on May 3; Monday after St. Giles; Sept. 1, and Thursday before New Michaelmas, teys and shaall ware.

RUTLANDSHIRE.

An Inland County, bounded on the Northeast by Lircolnshire; on the Southeast and South by Northamptonshire; and, on the West, by Leicestershire. It is shout 18 miles in length, and 15 in breadth. It is divided into 5 hundreds; Alstoe, East, Martinsley, Oakhamsoke, and Wrandike. The sivens of this county are, the Grash, or the Wash, and the Welland. The Market-towns are, Oakham and Uppingham. The county ands only 2 members to parliament, being those for the shire. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, partly in the Diocese or Peterso-ROUGH, and partly in that of LINCOLN; and in the MIDLAND CIRCUIT. It contains 149 square miles, or 95,360 scres; and 52 parishes. It had 4 monastic establishments, and 6 public charities; it has 3 parishes with no churches; 8 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants; 7 parishes with no parsonage-houses; 14 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in; the POOR-RATES were, in 1818, 18,0951. 0s. 74d.; the number of PAUPERS 1,042; the rental of the county, according to a return made to perliament in 1818, was 183,487l. 5s. 6d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 18,487; the number of inhabited houses, in 1821, was 3,589 the number of uninhabited houses at the same epoch was 61; the poorrates bear the proportion of one-seventh of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 3; the poor-rates, it 1776, were 2,641l.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 123; the number of acres to a person, 5; the number of acres to a house, 26.

The male population in 1821, was 9,223; the families employed in agriculture were in number 2,410; the families employed in handicraft were 1,634 in number; the number of other amilies was 492; the agricultural male popu-lation, 5,647; able labourers, 2,843; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer is 33. This county is exceedingly pretty to the eye; consisting, with but little exception, of handsome valleys. The whole county, with the exception of the north-western part, bordering on Lincolnshire, consists of gently-rising hills with vales between. The proportion of arable and peature land is very nearly equal; and there is some woodland. This latter is chiefly about the antient forcet of Leafield, on the western border of the county. The waste land is not extensive; Empinghom-heath, in the eastern part of the county, being the most ex-tensive waste in Ruttandshire. The soil is very various. There is much good red soil, some white stony soil. The vale of Catmose, a district lying to the west of Oakham, is reckeded as good as any land in the county. The husbandry is not of the best; the old system of two crops and a fallow heine system of two crops and a fallow being still the usual method of cultivation.

Cattle are but little bred in the county, the farmers prefer buying Scotch and Irish cattle to raising their own stock; and these they feed for the London markets. The sheep of the county are long-woolled and unthrifty animals; but Mr. Bakewell's Leicestershire breed has been introduced by the gentry, and is becoming general. There are no mines in this county, and its manufactures are but of very little consequence. The poor women carry on some spinning of linen, which is woven into tammies by the weavers of the southern parts of the county; and some knitting of stockings is also carried on by the poor women.

SHROPSHIRE.

An Inland County, bounded on the North by Denbighshire, a detached part of Flintshire and Cheshire; on the East by Staffordshire; on the South by Wor-cestershire and Herefordshire; and on the West by Radsorshire, Montgomeryshire, and Denbighshire. It is about 44 miles long, and 28 broad. It is divided into 15 divisions; Bradford (North), Bradford (South), Brimstrey, Chirbury, Condover, Ford, Munslew, Oswestry, Overs, Pimbill, Purslow, Stokesden, Bridgenorth, Shrewsbury, and Wenlock. principal RIVERS of this county are, the Severn, the Camlet, the Teind and the Clunn. The MARKET-TOWNS are, the Clum. The MARKET-LOWNER, Bishop's-Castle, Bridgenorth, Browley, Church-Stretton, Druyton, Ellespere, Ludlow, Madeley, Newport, Oswetry, Shiffnall, Shrewsbury, Wellington, Translation, Wem, Wenlock, Whitchurch. It 12 members to parliament; two for the X 2 shire, and two for each of the boroughs of Shrewsbury, Ludlow, Bishop's-Castle, Wenlock, and Bridgenorth. It is in the Province of Canterbury, partly in the Diocese or Hererond, and partly in that of LITCHFIELD AND COVENTRY, and it is in the Oxford Cincurr. This county contains 1341 square miles, or 856,240 scres; and 216 parishes. It had 51 monastic establishments, and 42 public charities; it has 10 parishes with no church, 26 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants; 58 parishes with no parsonage-houses; 38 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to dwell in; the Poor-names were, in 1818, 139,0601.13s. 94d.; the number of paupers 19,887; the rental of the county, according to a return laid before parliament in 1818, was 1,037,9881. 6s. 2d.; the population, according to a return made to parliament in 1821, was 206,153; the number of inhabited houses, in 1821, was 38,663; the number of uninhabited houses at the same epoch, 1,102; the poor-rates bear the proportion of One-seventh of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is one to every two; the poor-rates in 1776, were 21,5491.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county, is 153; the number of acres to a person, 4; the number of acres to a house, 21; the male population in 1821, was 102,056; the families employed in agriculture were 18,414 in number; the families employed in handicraft were 17,485 in number; the number of other families was 5,737. The agricultural male population 45,135; able labourers 22,567; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer is 37. Shropshire is a county of uneven surface, but it is not mountainous. The most hilly is the eastern side of it. The soil is various. are many commons and moors, but all of them are of small dimensions, the largest being near Bridgenorth, called the Morf. There is a great deal of valuable coppice-wood, chiefly of oak. The soil is of a deep loam about Oswestry. In the northern parts of the county generally, it is a good loam lying over a strata of coal and limestone; on the south-east it is sandy; about Wenlock and the heart of the county there is much pale-coloured clay; about Ludlow is some red loam mixed with a red clay, and, to the north-west of Ludlow, between that and Bishop's-Castle, is a good deal of slate and building-stone.

The usual crops in this county are wheat, barley, oats, peas, and turnips. There are other green crops besides turnips grown; some cabbages, and, in many places, a good many potatoes. Hops also are grown in the neighbourhood of Ludlow, but not in great quantity. Pasturage is not found much, excepting in the district between Bishop's-Castle and Ludlow, and by the sides of rivers. In cattle the county of Salop does not excel. It has no distinct breed of its own of any sort. The nest cattle of the northern parts of it are something of the long-horned Lancashire breed, kept for the dairies, to supply the manufacturing towns with milk and butter; bet about Drayton and Whitchurch, the dairies are large, and chiefly for cheese. The sheep are very various in their breed. Most farmers keep flocks; but especially those who live near to commons, where they can send them. The mansfactures of Shropshire are flammels and Welsh webs, at Shrewsbury and other towns; garden pots, and other coarse earthen-ware, and tobacco-pipes, at Broseley; china-ware at Caughley, and cotton, weaving at Coleham; besides some other inferior manufactures at other places. There are coal, iron, and less mines in this county; the first run almost from one end to the other of the western border of it, and the others are at Colebrook-Dale, on the Severn, a short distance from Shrewsbury.

SOMERSETSHIRE.

A MARITIME COUNTY, bounded on the North by Gloucestershire, the Irish sea, and the Severn; on the East by Wiltshire and Dornetsbire; on the South by Dorsetshire; and, on the West by Devonshire. It is 68 miles in length, and 47 in breadth. It is divided into 40 hundreds; namely, 'Abdick and Bulston, Andersfield, Bath Forum, Bempstone, Brent with Wrington, Bruton, Cannington, Carhampton, Catash, Chew and Chewton, Crewkerne, North-Currey, kerris-Norton, Frome, Glaston-twelve-Hides, Hampton and Claverton, Hartcliffe and Bedminster, Horethorne, Houndsborough, Huntspil and Puriton, Keynsham, Kilmersdon, Kingsbury (East and West), Martock, Mells and Leigh, Milverton, North-Petherton, South-Petherton, Pitney, Portbury, Somerton, Stone, Taunton and Taunten-Dean, Tintinhull, Wellow, Wells-Fo-rum, Whitestone, Whitey, Williton and Free-Manners, Winterstoke. The rivers of this county are, the Lower-Avon, the Brue, and the Pariet, There are 32 market-towns; Axbridge, Bath, Bridgewater, Bristol, Bruton, Castle-Cary, Chard, Crewkerne, Dalverton, Dunster, Frome, Glastonbury, Ilehester, Ilminster, Keynsham, Langport, Milbourne-Port, Milverton, Minehead, North-Currey, North-Petherton, Pensford, South-Petherton, Shepton, Mallet, Somerton, Stowey, Watchet, Wellington, Wells, Wincanton, Wivellscombe, Yeovil. It is in the Province of Canterbury, in the Diocese of Bath and Wells, and in the Western Cibcuit. This county sends altogether 18 members to parliament; two for the shire, and two each for the towns of Bath, Bridgewater, Bristol, Ilchester, Milbourne-Port, Minehead, Taunton, and Wells. It contains 1,642 square miles, or 1,050,880 acres, and 475 parishes. It had 47 monastic establishments, and 47 public charities; it has 16 parishes with no churches, 44 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants, 110 parishes with no parsonage-houses, parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in: the Poor-RATES were, in 1818, 250,8271. 3s. 34d.; the number of PAUPERS is 28,917; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 1,900,6511.5s. 74d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 355,314; the number of inhabited houses in 1821 was 61,852; the number of uninhabited houses at the same period, 1974: the poor-rates bear the proportion of oneseventh of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is one to every three; the poorrates in 1776 were 49,1811.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 215; the number of acres to a person, 3; the number of acres to a house, 16; the male population, in 1821, was 170,199; the families employed in agriculture were in number 31,448; the families employed in handicraft were 27,132 in number; the number of other families was 14,957; the male agricultural population was 72,785; and the able labourers were in number 36,393; so that to every able-bodied labourer of this county there must be 26 acres This is a hilly county: the principal ranges of hills are, the Quantor, near Taunton; Lansdown, near Bath; Brendon, near Wiveliscombe; the White-down, near Chard; Poulden, near Bridgewater; and the Meudip-hills, lying in a direct line between Axbridge and Frome. The latter are by far the loftiest and most extensive. The ancient forests of the county are Selwood, near Frome; Petherton, near Bridgewater; Exmoor, consisting of the western extremity of the county. The largest half of Somersetshire is in pasture, and about one-eighth is given for woods, heaths, and roads. There is beside these, good deal of marsh and moor land in Somersetshire; but to enumerate the moors and marshes, and denote their local situations, would take up more room than this short notice of the county will allow of. The soils are extremely various, most of the hills being of a rocky soil, mixed with limestone, or gravelly with limestone, or of freestone grit; with all the variations that usually accompany these. The soils of the low-lands are quite as various as those of the hills, but, for the greater part, very fertile; and the county is esteemed one of the richest of English counties. Wheat, barley, outs, peas, and beens, are the principal corn crops in the different districts; grazing steers and heifers is very much practised, but the pasture-land is chiefly employed in dairy farming, which is carried on to a very considerable extent. In the whole of the northern districts apple-orchards are very abundant; they are not scarce in the middle district of the county, and the cider of the south-western district is renowned for its excellence. Devonshire breed of neat cattle is preferred by the Somersetshire graziers and dairy-farmers. The neighbourhood of Bath and the Mendip-hills have a breed of sheep of their own, large and hardy, but in other parts of the county an improved Dorset is the sort mostly seen. The horses used in this county are supplied from the north. There is a small native breed, found in Exmoor forest, very sure-footed and serviceable, but very small. The mines of Somerset-shire are, of lead, in the vicinity of the Mendip-hills, particularly at Priddy and East-Harptree; of coal, in the whole of the northern district of the county, particularly about Stratton-onthe-Foss, and Kilweston. Something approaching to alabaster is found about Watchet, and at Bath and other places the free-stone is of excellent quality. The manufactures of the county are chiefly of woollens and knit stockings; but these have been on the decline for some years. The celebrated Cheddar cheese comes from Cheddar in this county.

- BATH, is the most popular city of the West of England. It is 32 miles N.E. by N. from Somerton, and 107 W. by S. from London. The diocese of Bath and Wells comprises all Somersetshire. It is seated in what was originally a dreary, arid wild, surrounded by hills. on every side, but through an opening in which the Avon flows, and then winds nearly all round the city. It is said to have been indebted to its medicinal springs for its origin, and a romance is related as to the discovery of the springs; namely, that a British prince was cured of the leprosy from following the example of some pigs which were infected with this disorder, and which he observed to bathe in the springs and cure themselves. It was inhabited by the Romans about the middle of the first century; and evidences sufficient have been found of there having been once a wall round it of considerable height and thickness, having five towers and four principal gates. The springs were converted into magnificent baths by the Romans, who christened it Aque Solis, or, Waters of the Sun. Agricola passed a winter there after his campaign in Wales, and Arian erected a college of armourers. About the year 208, Geta resided there, while his father, Septimus Severus, was quelling an insurrection in Caledonia.

In 493, an army of Sexons, under the command of Ella, encamped on Lansdown, and laid siege to Bath. Arthur, however, gave them battle and repulsed them. In 577, the Saxons, Cesulin and Cuthwin (the former being king of Wessex), led their armies to Dyrham, eight miles from Bath. Here they encountered the Britons under three kings, but, after a sanguinary battle, the Britons were completely defeated. The Roman name was now changed by the Saxons to Hat Bathun, hot baths. Christian religion was now openly promulgated; and, in 676, a monastery was established by Osric, the Saxon king of the Huicii. The town was annexed to the kingdom of Wessex, and became a burgh. In 775, it was seized by Offa, king of Mercia, who added very much to its splendour: but, during the in-cursions of the Danes, it sunk into obscurity, and did not recover till the reign of Athelstan, who greatly endowed its monastery, and granted it some important privileges. During the reign of Edward the Confessor, Bath was held by his queen as part of her dower; and it remained annexed to the crown till the end of the Saxon dynasty. In the reign of William I., it was one of the royal demesnes; and, being plundered and burned during the insurrection of Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, and others who favoured the claims of Robert Earl of Normandy, it was bought, in 1090, of William Rufus, by John de Villula, of Tours, for the sum of 500 marks, who, obtaining permission to remove the pontifical seat of the diocese from Wells to Bath, rebuilt the monastery and church, restored public and private buildings, and became the founder of the city of Bath, and, in 1160, he conferred the whole property on the monastery of St. Peter, and was himself made Bishop of Bath. The city remained in the possession of the monastery till Savaric, in the year 1193, gave it to Richard I., in exchange for the Abbey of Glastonbury; but the prior still continued to hold a rental of 301. a year upon it. In the reign of Edw. III., Bath was celebrated for its manufacture of cloth, a branch of manufactures introduced by the monks. At the "reformation," the Abbey was granted to Humphrey Colles, and being sold by him, the purchaser, or his son, gave it to the mayor and corporation as a parish church. Queen Elizabeth granted it a charter of incorporation; and, in 1794, a new charter was granted it with some extension of privileges. In the civil wars, Bath fortified for the king, but it was seized upon by the Earl of Bedford. It was retaken by the Royalists, who held it only two years, after which, and until the restoration, it was held by the parliament forces. The abbey church is of Gothic architecture, and it remains now in the same form as when founded in 1532. There are besides, four parish churches, and five chapels of ease in Bath, one Catholic chapel, and many Dissenters' meeting-houses. There are also five hospitals, one grammar, and several other charity schools. The city is renowned for the regularity and beauty of its buildings, and the order of its streets. the houses being almost all built with white brick, or with stone. Invalid resort to it for the sake of drinking the water of its springs, and a large building, eighty-five feet long, forty-five les wide, and thirty-four feet high, called the pump-room, is provided for them to take exercise in without being expose! to the weather. The corporation colsists of a mayor, aldermen, and commoncouncil, with inferior officers, and these (thirty in number) send two members to parliament. Bath contains the for: parishes of St. James, St. Michael, St. Peter and St. Paul, and Walcott. The population 36,811. Market, Wed. and Sat.; fairs, Feb. 14, July 10, cattle.

  - BRISTOL, is at the distance of 35 miles S.W. by S. from Gloucester, and 113 W. from London. It is situated at about 8 miles from the mouth of the Avon, where that river discharges itself into the Bristol Channel. The diocese of Bristol comprises the city, part of Gloucestershire, and part of Dorsetshire. The whole city stands on rising grounds, of which St. Michael's-Hill and Kingsdown are the two highest, the whole occupying a circumference of seven miles. According to ancient historians, this place was founded by Brennus, the supposed first king of the Britons, about S80 years before the Christian era. Gildas, a British monk, mentions Brito, a town in 480, but it makes no figure in the history of England till the year 1063, when Harold set sail for Bristow with a fleet to reduce Wales. In the reign of William I., there were mints established there, and, in 1696, William III. struck off half-crowns at Bristol. In Odo's conspiracy, 1087, the rebels made Bristol their head-In the beginning of the quarters.

eleventh century it began to assume that importance as a commercial port which it has gone on increasing ever since. Its advantages as an emporium for Irish produce were even then felt; and, besides this, it opened a commerce with Norway and all parts of Europe; and it was also a grand mart for slaves. The Empress Maud resided there a short time during her contest with King Stephen; and, in 1141, Stephen was conveyed as a prisoner to Gloucester, and thence to Bristol, where he was sometime kept a close prisoner. In the reign of Henry II., it had so greatly increased in its commerce, particularly with Ireland, that the burgesses obtained a grant of free toll throughout England, Wales, and Normandy, and full power to inhabit and possess the city of Dublin, whither a colony was sent. 1216, the Pope's legate, Guelo, held a synod at Bristol, and there excommunicated the adherents of Lewis, the French king's son. In 1280, Edward I. held a parliament there, and then, for the first time, a writ was issued to the mayor and magistrates of Bristol to send two representatives to the parliament. In 1345, William de Colford, recorder, drew up a code of municipal laws, and the corporation adopted a part, and these were confirmed in a charter, granted to the town by Edward III., who, besides this, constituted it a town and county in itself. In the year 1490, the streets of Bristol were newly paved, and Henry VII. and his chancellor kept the royal court at St. Augustine's palace; and, the following year, the same king granted a new charter to the town, and presented his own sword to the mayor, to be borne on state occasions before him. Henry VIII. made Bristol a city and a bishop's see, by his own letters patent; and Queen Elizabeth granted it a new charter and visited it in the twenty-fourth year of her reign. Another charter was granted it by Charles I., in which the castle and precincts, which had hitherto been deemed to be within the county of Gloucester, were now made to belong to the town and county of Bristol. In 1642, Bristol being in the hands of the parliament, the walls were strengthened and the castle put in repair, and a fort was erected at Brandon, now called the Royal Fort. In the year following, Prince Rupert laid siege to the city and took it, and the king joined the camp at Bristol. Two years afterwards, the city again fell into the hands of the parliament, and the royalist party never rallied again. On Cromwell being made Protector, he ordered the castle to be demolished, and streets built on its site, and this was so completely done, that nothing now remains of what was that extensive structure but a few arches in Tower-street. In 1684, the king granted Bristol a charter, confirmatory of the foregoing ones; and, in 1702, Queen Anne visited it, in company with the Prince of Denmark, and was entertained by the citizens with great splendour, and, in 1710, on another visit to it, she confirmed and added to the charters. The cathedral of Bristol is a fine building. comprising specimens of Norman and Gothic architecture, and is situated on a part of the city, called College-green. It was originally the collegiate church to the monastery of St. Augustine. founded by Robert Fitz-Hardinge in 1460, as a priory of Black Canons. Besides the cathedral, there are now in this city 18 churches and chapels, and 20 chapels of Dissenters. There are also nearly 20 hospitals and schools in it; and it is one of the most important towns of commerce in England. It trades with almost every quarter of the world; and has almost a monopoly of the trade between England and Ireland. It has sugar-houses, vitriol and coalworks, brass and iron founderies, distilleries, glass-houses, &c. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, 12 aldermen, 42 common-councilmen, and inferior officers. It sends two members to parliament, the right of election being in the freeholders of forty shillings a year, and in the free burgesses, who are all those who have gained their freedom by servitude, by purchase, or by marrying the daughters of freemen; the number of voters being altogether about 6000. Before the reformation, there were in Bristol the following religious and charitable establishments. A Benedictine Priory, built by Robert, son of Hen. I., in the north-east of the city; granted, 35 Hen. VIII., to Henry Brayne. Great St. Augustine's, now Holy Trinity and Cathedral, founded in the year 1148, by Robert Fitz Harding; yearly value 7671. 15s. 3d., now worth 15,355l. 5s. St. Mary-Magdalen Nunnery, founded by Eva, wife to Robert Fitzharding, in the reign of Hen. II., yearly value 21l. 11s. 3d., now worth 4311. 5s.; granted, 31 Hen. VIII., to Henry Brayne and John Marsh, St.

Bartholomew's Hospital, granted, by Hen. VIII., to the executors of Robert Thorn and Sir Thomas West; is now a grammar school. St. Catherine's Hospital, founded, 4 Hen. III., by Robert de Berkele; yearly value 211. 15s. 8d., now worth 4351. 13s. 4d. Gaunts, or Billeswyke Hospital, built in the year 1229, by Maurice de Gaunt, for one hundred poor people; yearly value 1401., now worth 2,8001.; granted, 33 Hen. VIII., to the mayor and citizens; is now an Orphan Hospital. St. John's Hospital, built by John Earl of Moreton, afterwards King of England, for the sick; yearly value 51l. 10s. 4d., now worth 1,030l. 6s. 8d.; granted, 36 Hen. VIII., to G. Owen. St. Lawrence's Hospital, founded before Hen. III.; granted, 35 Hen. VIII., to Sir Ralph Sadleyr. Lyons, or Lewin's Medestreet Hospital, founded in the year 1460, by William Spenser. St. Michael's-hill Almshouse, founded in the year 1504, by John Foster, for one priest, eight poor men, and five poor women, is yet in being. Radcliff-hill Almshouse, built in the year 1442, by William Cannings, is still in being, though having no endowment. Temple. street Hospitals. Under Tucker's Hall is one founded by the Tucker's company; under the Weaver's Hall is another founded at a very early period. Temple-Gate Hospital, built by Roger Magda-len, of Nonney. Trinity Hospital, founded, 4 Hen. V., by John Barstable, merchant of the town; granted, 20 Eliz., to the mayor and corporation; is still in being. An Augustine Friary, built in the reign of Edw. II., by Sir Simon and Sir William Montacute; granted, 31 Hen. VIII., to Maurice Dennis. The Black Friary, founded by Sir Maurice Gaunt; granted, 31 Hen. VIII., to William Chester. The Grey Friars' House, founded in the year 1234; granted, 33 Hen. VIII., to the mayor and citizens. The population of the city is 52,889; but the whole population of all the parishes, parts of which extend beyond its limits, amounts to 68,318. The parishes are 18 in number; viz., All-Saints, St. Augustin, Christ-Church, St. Edwin, St. James, St. John-the-Baptist, St. Leonard, St. Mary-le-Port, St. Mary-Redoliff, St. Michael, St. Nicholas, St. Paul, St. Peter, St. Philip-and-Jacob, St. Sta-phen, Temple, St. Thomas, and St. Werburgh. The markets are on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday; and the fairs are on March 1 and Sept. 1, for most sorts of goods, and lasting ten days each. A market for cattle every Thursday.

- WELLS, is a city situated 13 miles N. by S. from Somerton, and 121 miles W. by S. from London. The Diocese of Bath and Wells comprises the county of Somerset. It owes its name to a remarkable well called St. Andrew's Woll. It is situated under the Mendip hills, and the streets are clean and commodious, and the buildings neat and even elegant. It owes its origin to the piety of Ins, a Saxon king, who founded a college church there, as early as 704. It has been twice incorporated, once by King John, and again by Queen Elizabeth. It was created a Bishop's see in the year 905; and the second Bishop, Wincliffe, began the cathedral, which is still considered one of the most beautiful specimens of church architecture. The bishop's palace stands a little way northward of the cathedral; some part is in ruins, and it has a most round it which gives it the appearance of a fortified castle. The great hall of this palace was 120 feet long, and 70 feet wide, and was demolished for the sake of the lead on the roof. The history of Wells is disconnected with any thing extraordinary, or of a political nature. Circumstances connected with its religious institutions form all the incidents connected with it. In the 10th century, John de Villula, of Tours, purchased Bath of William Rufus; restored the buildings of the town, built a monastery and collegiate church, and, becoming himself bishop, removed the see from Wells to Bath, styling himself Bishop of Bath, which title several succeeding bishops assumed; but the people of Wells became enraged at this contempt shown to their own town, and insisted (and with success) that the future Bishops of Bath should take the title of Bishop of Bath and Wells, which they did and still do. Wells has no trade of any consequence, nor has it any manufactures. It is governed by a mayor and masters, and it sends two members to parliament; the right of election being in the mayor, masters, and burgesses, who become free of the city by birth, by servitude, or by mar-riage. The number of voters is 150. Markets, Wed. and Sat., and fairs, Jan. 4, May 14, July 6, Oct. 25, Nov. 30, oxen, horses, sheep, and hogs. Here there were the following religious houses:-A Cathedral Church, built in the year 704, by King Ina; enlarged afterwards by different bishops; revenues of the bishop were valued at 1,843l. 19s. 4d., and of the canons at 8971. 5s. 11d., both sums now worth 54,825l. 5s. Mauntery College, built in the year 1401, by Ralph Erghum, Bishop of Bath and Wells, for the Clergy of the Cathedral; yearly value 111. 18s. 8d., now worth 2381. 13s. 4d.; granted, 2 Edw. VI., to John Aylworth and John Lacy. Vicar's College, began by Walter de Hull, Canon; emarged, in the year 1347, by Rad de Salopfa, Biahop of Wells; yearly value 721. 10s. 9\frac{1}{2}d., now worth 1,450l. 15s. 10d. Brigatreet Hospital, founded for twenty-four Poor Persons, by Nicholas Buthwith, Biahop of Bath, about the year 1424, but maintains now, they say, only twenty. St. John's Hospital, founded in the reign of King John; by Hugh of Wells, afterwards Bishop of Lincoln; yearly value 41L 3s. 6\frac{1}{2}d., now worth 823l. 10s. 10d.; granted, 13 Eliz., to Christopher Hattos. Wells contains the two parishes of St. Cuthbert (In and Out), and St. Andrew, which is extra-parochial. The population is 5,888.

STAFFORDSHIRE.

An INLAND COUNTY, bounded on the Northeast by Derbyshire; on the East by Leicestershire; on the South-east by Warwickshire; on the South by Worcesterahire, and, on the West, by Shropshire. It is about 60 miles in length, and about 38 in breadth. It is divided into 5 hundreds; Cuttlestone, Offlow, Pirehill, Seisdon, and Totmonslow. The principal arreas are, the

Trent, the Dove, the Tame, and the It has 25 MARKET-TOWNS; namely, Bentley, Brewood, Abbot's-Bromley, Burslem, Burton, Cannock, Chesdle, Dudley, Eccleshall, Handley-Green, Lane End, Leek, Lichfield, Longnor, Newcastle-under-Lyne, Penkridge, Rudgeley, Stafford, Stone, Tamworth, Tutbury, Uttoxeter, Walsall, Wednesbury, and Wolverhampton. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, in the Diocese of Lichfield and Co-VENTRY, and in the Oxford Circuit. It returns 10 members to parliament; 2 for the county, 2 for the city of Lichfield, and two each for the boroughs of Stafford, Newcastle, and Tamworth. This county contains 1,148 square miles, or 734,720 acres; and 145 parishes. It , had 31 monastic establishments, and 50 public charities; it has 9 parishes with no churches; 15 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants; 73 parishes with no parsonage-houses; 18 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in; the Poor-RATES Were, in 1818, 174,8491.6s.74d.; the number of PAUPERS 24,044; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 1,150,2481. 16s. 3d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 341,040; the number of inhabited houses, in 1821, was 63,319; the number of uninhabited houses at the same period, 2,326; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-sixth of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 3; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 31,089l.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 209; the number of acres to a person, 2; the number of acres to a house, 11. The male population, in 1821, was 171,668; the families employed in agriculture were 18,285 in number; the families employed in handieraft were 42,435 in number; the number of other families was 8,060; the agricultural male population, 45,637; able labourers, 22,818; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer is 32. This is almost a level county; the hills in it being few. Of these few. the Weaver hills, in the northeast part of the county, are the highest. The arable prevails over the pastureland, in the proportion of one acre to There are some considerable wastes, such as Cannock-Chase, in the middle of the county; Needwood-Forest, to the seat of Abbot's-Bromley; Blore-

Wood, to the west of Eccleshall; and there are many moors in the northern extremity of it. The woods are chiefy on the estates of the principal gentry of the county, and the growth of timber remarkably fine. A strong clay under red mould is general in that district of the county which lies north of Abbot's-Bromley; some light, sandy soil is found on the south of it, and some limestone is found about Failey and Kingsale, but the county consists chiefly of good mould upon a clay bottom. There are many spots of peatearth; and much of the pasture-land a little other than a peaty surface, well drained. The county is an inclosed one. and the usual crops, wheat, bafley, oats. rye, beans, and peas, according to usual rotation. The cattle of the county are a long-horned breed, and, on the banks of the rivers Trent and Dove, a great deal of cheese and butter is made for the markets of the manufacturing towns of the county. There are three native breeds of sheep; the grey-faced, without horns, natives of Cannock-Chase; the black-faced, horned, natives of the commons in the western district; the white-faced and long-wooled, bred in the moorlands. Besides these, the new Leicester has been introduced, and is now very common in most parts of this county. Coals are very abundant in Staffordshire: not less than 50,000 acres are computed to contain coals. The greatest depth in one place is the district reaching from Rudgley to Dudley, and, in breadth, reaching from Wolverhampton to Walsail. There is besides this, a great breadth of it in the neighbourhood of Newcastle-under-Lyne. A copper-mine is worked at Mixon, near Leek, and another at Ecton-Hill. This metal is found also in other parts. The manufactures of Staffordshire are hardware, glass, japanned goods, linen, woollen, cotton. and silk. The hardware factories are principally about Wolverhampton; the cotton-factories at Tamworth, Rocester. and Fazeley; and Wedgwood's potters ware, in the northern district, not for from Newcastle.

LICHFIELD, is 164 miles S.E. by S. of Stafford, and 1184 miles N.W. from London. The diocese of Lichfield and Coventry consists of the counties of Stafford, and Derby, and part of War-wickshire and Shropshire. It is supposed to have risen on the ruins of a Roman town. The different ancient writers spell it differently, as Licidfield, Lichfield, Lichesfield, besides other varistions, all of which have been construed into "the field of the dead;" and this construction is favoured by a tradition that, in the time of Dioclesian, upwards of a thousand Christians were massacred here. But Dr. Stukeley opposes this notion, and contends, that the name is clearly derived from the marsh which formerly occupied the site of the city and the adjacent grounds; Lich being the Saxon name for a bog. That which was formerly a marsh is now a fertile valley, and Lichfield is seated in the middle of it; a town of great respectability and beauty, though not so great as the generality of our cathedral towns, either in consequence or population. Its streets are spacious, regular, clean, and well-built; a lake divides it in two, the city and the close; the latter standing on rather higher ground than the former. This stood several sieges during the civil wars, and was twice taken by the Parliament forces. In the 3Srd year of Edw. I., Lichfield first sent members to parliament; and it was then governed by a guild and guildmaster; but it was not regularly incorporated till the 1st of Edward VI., when the corporation was made to consist of bailiffs, burgesses, citizens, and commonalty. This charter by which Lichfield was elevated to the rank of a city, was confirmed by Mary, Elizabeth, James I., and by Charles II., successively, and many additional rights and immunities were conferred on the city by these sovereigns. It is at this time governed by a recorder, highsteward, bailiffs, town-clerk, a coroner, and a common-council, which is composed of twenty-one brethren. Lichfield, and its suburbs are a distinct county of themselves; the recorder, steward, and bailiffs, are justices of the peace within it, and have power to hold courts of jail delivery, and to sentence to death. It has also the annual courts of array, of the great portmote, and of the view of frank pledge, &c. Lichfield cathedral is esteemed one of the handsomest specimens of church architecture in the kingdom. It is said to have been founded in the sixth century, by King Oswy. It is less doubtful, that that part of it, called St. Mary's chapel, was built about the year 1296, by Walter de Langton, the then bishop. Having received much injury during the civil wars, Bishop Hacket, who was appointed to the see after the restoration, restored it to its former splendour. Without it is richly ornamented with scriptural figures, and within it has many handsome private, as well as public monuments. A very handsome bishop's palace, near the north-eastern corner of the cathedral, was built by Bishop Langton, in the time of Edward I.; but the bishops of this see having long fixed their residence at Eccleshall-Castle, a fine ancient castle, about 35 miles from Lichfield, this pelace is generally let off as a private residence. About the year 1102, this see was united with that of Coventry, as is described under the head "Coventry," and the bishops now style themselves "of Lichfield and Coventry." The city is divided into three parishes; St. Mary's, St. Chad's, and St. Michael's. There are in the town the following charities; viz. an English school, for thirty poor boys, in Bore-street; a free grammar school, founded before the reformation, in St. John-street, and in Bacon-street, an Hospital, for fifteen poor women, endowed and erected by Bishop Hepworth. Besides the cathedral, there was, before the "Reformation," a Grey Friary here, founded in the year 1229, by Alexander, then Bishop; but it was granted, by Hen. VIII., to Richard Crumbilthorn. There is no manufacturing of any consequence carried on in this place; a little earthenware is made, but much more in the neighbouring villages than in the town. Lichfield sends two members to parliament; the right of election being in the bailiffs, magistrates, freeholders of forty shillings yearly, and all who hold by burgage tenure, and are enrolled freemen: the number of voters is about 600. Lichfield consists of the three parishes of St. Chad, St. Mary, and St. Michael, and that part called the Close, which is extra-parochial.

The population of the city itself is 6,075; but, including those parts of the parishes which extend beyond it, the amount is 8,715. The markets are on Tuesday and Friday; and the fairs are on Shrove-Tuesday and Ash-Wednesday, cattle, sheep, bacon, cheese, and iron; May 12, sheep and cattle; first Tuesday in November, geese and cheese.

SUFFOLK.

A MARITIME COUNTY. It is bounded on the North by Norfolk; on the East by the German Ocean; on the South by Essex; and on the West by Cambridge. It is about 47 miles in length, and about 27 in breadth. It is divided into 21 hundreds; Babergh, Blackburn, Bly-thing, Bosmere and Claydon, Carlford, Cobneis, Cosford, Hartesmere, Hoxne, Lackford, Loes, Mutford and Lothingland, Plomesgate, Risbridge, Samford, Stow, Thedwestry, Thingoe, Thredling, Wangford, Wilford. The principal mivers of this county are, the Gipping, the Stour, the Deben, the Waveney, the Little Ouse, the Ald, the Blythe, the Larke. The MARKET-TOWNS are, Aldborough, Beceles, Bildeston, Brandon, Botesdele, Bungay, Bury-St.-Ed-mands, Clare, Debenham, Dunwich, Eye, Framlingham, Hadleigh, Halesworth, Haverhill, Ipswich, Ixworth, Lavenham, Lowestoft, Mendlesham, Mildenhall, Needham-Market, Nev-Needham-Market, Mildenhall, Neyland, Orford, Saxmundham, Southwold, Stewmarket, Sudbury, and Woodbridge. It is in the Province of Canterbury, chiefly in the Diocese or Non-Wicz, but partly in that of CANTERBURY, and in the Norrolk Circuit. Suffolk returns 16 members to parliament; two for the county, and two for each of the boroughs of Aldborough, Dunwich, Bury-St.-Edmunds, Eye, Ipswich, Orford and Sudbury. It contains 1512 square miles, or 967,680 acres; and 510 parishes. It had 52 monastic establishments, and 56 public charities; it has 23 parishes containing less than 100 inhabitants each; 97 parishes with parsonage-houses; 109 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to dwell in; the Poor-rates were, in 1818, 285,0071.14s.6]d.; the number of paupers 28,577; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 1,127,404l. 2s. 94d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 270,542; the number of inhabited houses, in 1321, was 42,773; of uninhabited ones, 656; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-fourth of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is one to every two; the poor-rates in 1776, were 55,8391.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county, is 185; the number of acres to a person, 3; the number of acres to a house, 25; the male population in 1821, was 132,410; the families employed in agriculture were in number 30,795; the families employed in handicraft were 17,418 in number; the number of other families was 6,851. The agricultural male population 74,051; able labourers 37,025; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer 26. Suffolk is a a level county, and purely an agricultural one. The soil varies less, perhaps, than does that of any other county of England, and it is, generally speaking, a strong loam on a clay or marl bottom. In the northwest corner, there is a considerable district of fen-land, about Mildenhall and Brandon, consisting of light bog, or peat surface, with marl below. The produce of the county is wheat, beans, barley, oats, clover, turnips, and very generally following in that order. one of the most productive and most skilfully-tilled of our counties. In some parts there are extensive dairies, producing excellent butter, for the mar-kets of the county and for London, but the cheese is very inferior. The horses of this county are very well known to be of the very best for agricultural purposes; strong, yet light, and of excel-lent courage and great durability. The breed of cows is also very famous : they are rather small, hornless, with but little dewlap, with clean, well-formed limbs, and great productiveness. The sheep are of the Norfolk breed, excepting where of late they have been changed for that of the South-Downs. This county is almost unrivalled in productiveness of game; and for rabbits it is certainly unequalled. What woodland there is in it may be traced from the north-east to the north-west corner of it; but, though for the greater past an enclosed, it is not a woody county. It has no mines of any kind, nor has it any manufactures worthy of mention.

SURREY.

An Inland County, bounded on the North by Middlesex, and a part of Bucks, from which it is separated by the Thames; on the East by Kent; on the South by Sussex; and, on the West by Berks and Hants. It is about 37 miles in length, and 27 broad. The hundreds are, Blackheath, Brixton, Copthorne, Effingham, Elmhridge, Farnham, Godalming, Godley, Kingston, Reigate, Tandridge, Wallington, Woking, and Wotton. The rivers are, the Thames (by which it is bounded on the North), the Wey, the Mole, and the Wandle. The Markettowns are Chertsey, Croydon, Dorking, Epsom, Ewell, Farnham, Godalming, Guildford, Haslemere, Kingston, Reigate, Southwark, and Woking. It is the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, chiefly in the Drocese or Winchester, but partly in that of CANTERBURY, and it is in the Home Circuit. Surrey sends 14 members to parliament; two for the county, and two each for the boroughs of Southwark, Guildford, Reigate, Haslemere, Blechingly, and Gatton. contains 758 square miles, or 485,120 acres, and 141 parishes. It had 12 monastic establishments, and 29 public charities; it has 1 parish with no church; S parishes with less than 100 inhabitants, 30 parishes with no parsonage-houses, 12 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in: the Poor-rates were, in 1818, 293.1761. 14s. 113d.; the number of Paupers is $2,921; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, 'was 1,519;1721. 18s. 9d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 398,658; the number of inhabited houses in 1821 was 64,790; the number of uninhabited houses at the same period, 2,741; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-sixth of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is one to every three; the poor-rates in 1776 were 48,510l.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 525; the number of acres to a person, 1; the number of acres to a house, 7; the male population, in 1821, was 189,871; the families employed in agriculture were 14,944 in number; the families employed in trade or handicraft were 46,811 in number; the number of other families was 27,051; the agricultural male population was 31,951; able labourers, 15,975; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied la-bourer is 30. With the exception of a ridge of hills running from one end of the county to the other; that is, from Faraham, by Guildford, Dorking, and Reigate, to Westerham; Surrey is a rather level county; but the ridge of chalk hills, well known as the Surrey Hills, is a high and almost unbroken ridge, which comes out of Wiltshire, through Hampshire into Surrey, and thence through Kent to the sea at Folkestone. The striking characteristic, however, of this county is, its vast heaths and commons, the barrenness of the greater part of which is proverbial. Bagshot - Heath, Purbright - Common, Woking-Heath, Cowbridge-Common, · Ockham-Heath, Epsem-Downs, Hurtwood-Common, and Thursley-Common, Frensham-Common, and Hind-Head, are the largest tracts of waste. With the exception of Epsom-Downs, these are all either dreary and uncultivated wastes, or they are here and there planted with Scotch firs. The southern side of the county is called the Weald; it extends from Haslemere to the Eastern corner, and is about four or five miles in breadth. The soil is a cold, stiff clay, producing excellent timber and coppice wood, good wheat, oats, and beans; but it is chiefly in wood. Northward of this, comes a line of sandy country, running parallel with it, and between it and the ridge of chalk before described. This, though sandy, is (where the heaths and commons de not intervene) a fertile district, bearing wheat, barley, oats, turnips, and other crops. To the north of the chalk ridge is a district, having in it the extremes of fertility and barrenmess; the fertile right bank of the Thames, and the extraordinarily barren Bagshot and other heaths. The county is not renowned for its agriculture. Its produce is wheat, barley, oats; but it cannot be said to produce largely either of these. Near London, cabbages, potatoes, carrots, and other vegetables, are grown in large quantities for the markets of London; and, at Farnham, about one thousand acres of superior land immediately surrounding, that town are cultivated exclusively in hops, which are so renowned as to bear a higher price than hops from any other part of the kingdom. The horses of the county are heavy, black animals. The horned , cattle, near London, are of the Holderness breed: but elsewhere they are either Sussex or Devonshire, or a cross between these. The sheep are most of the Southdown breed, though some Dorsets are kept. : On the heaths is a little breed, called beath-croppers; small, hornless, and coarse-woolled, and kept only for the purpose of browsing on the beaths, which they are hardy enough to live on. Surrey has no mines of any kind; and its manufactures are not of importance sufficient to make them worthy of being noticed here.

SUSSEX.

THE COUNTY OF SUSSEX is bounded on the North by Surrey and Kent; on the East by Kent; on the South by the English Channel; and on the West by Hampshire. It is 70 miles long, and about 28 miles broad. It is divided into 6 rapes, namely, Arundel, Bramber, Chichester, Hastings, Lewes, Pevensey. Its principal rivers are, the Arun, the Adur, the Ouse, the Rother, the Rye, and the Cockmere. It has 18 market-towns: Arundel, Battle, Bramber, Brighton, Chichester, Cuckfield, Grinstead, Hailsham, Hastings, Horsham, Lewes, Mid-hurst, Petworth, Rys, Seaford, Shore-ham, Steyning, and Winchelses. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, and partly in that Drocess, but mostly in the Diocess of Chicagaran, and it is in the Hour Circuit. Sussex sends 28 members to parliament; 2 for the county, 2 fer the city of Chichester; and 2 for each of the boroughs of Arundel, Bramber, Grinstead, Hustings, Horsham, Lewes, Midhurst, Rye, Seaford, Shoreham, Steyning, Winchelsen. lt contains 1,463 square miles, or 936,320 acres, and 510 parishes. It had 80 monastic establishments, and 26 public charities; it has 3 parishes with ho churches; 32 parishes containing less than 100 inhabitants each; 54 parishes with no parsonage-houses; 60 pariabes with parsonage-houses, which, in a return made to parliament in 1818, the incumbents represent as unfit for them to live in; the poor-rates were, in 1$18, 356,5491. 13s. 114d.; the number of paupers, 26,328; the rental of the county. according to a return made to parliame 3 B 3

in 1818, was 915,348l. 1s. 7d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 233,019; the number of inhabited bouses in 1821 was 36,283; the number of uninhabited houses at the same period, 1,272; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-third compared with the rental; the number of paupers, compered with the number of houses, is 1 to every 2; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 53,499l.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 159; the number of acres to a person, 3; the number of acres to a house, 26; the male population, in 1821, was 116,705; the families employed in agriculture were 21,920 in number; the families employed in trade or handicraft were 15,463 in number; the number of other families was 6,182; the agricultural male population, 58,721; able labourers, 29,360; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer, 31. This county is hilly near the ses-coast, or southern border, where there is a ridge of hilly downs, called the South-Downs. It may be divided into four classes of soil: the sandy, on the North, or borders of Surrey; the clay, along the middle, from one end to the other, called the Weald, and the chalk, the whole of the South-Downs, extending from the borders of Hampshire, that is, a little to the south of Midhurst, and running, by Ditchling and Lewes, to the coast on the south of Hailsham. The sandy district consists of arable, wood, and waste; of the two former hearly equal parts, and a good deal of the latter. Oak is the principal timber, and birch, in many places, constitutes a large part of the underwood. The arable produces good crops of corn, but it is but ill-farmed, the farmer being woodman, husbandman, herdsman, warrener, and frequently smuggler, all at the same time. The clay district, or at the same time. Wesld, is a fine district of oak timber and hazel underwood, reaching from a little on the north of Rye to Horsham, and then into Surrey near Haslemere. This district is interspersed with pretty corn-fields, growing excellent wheat and beans, and, in some places, hops; but not above one-third of it is arable land. The chalk, or South-Downs, is the most beautiful range of smooth grass-land that can be imagined. Nor is it all grass-land, for many and very beautiful farms are carved out amongst the hills, with elegant farm-houses and complete farm-yards in the pretty valleys between them. These are essentially sheep-farms, and, though wheat, barley, and oats are produced in them, their main riches have always been on the excellent breed of sheep raised on them, and which bear the name of the Downs themselves. The Sussex horned cattle are small, but very well made, and the cows are excellent milkers. The sheep are those above-mentioned; they are hornless, with black face and legs, the neck clean, and body not long or large. but remarkably round. They are excellent in flesh, and their wool is very fine. This sort of sheep is more general than any other in Sussex, though there are to be found flocks of the Dorset, and also flocks of the Romney-Marsh breeds. Neither the hogs nor the horses are peculiar. There are no mines in the county; the manufactures are gun-powder, at Battle; paper on the eastern borders; charcoal in the Weald and in the northern part; soap, potash, blankets at different places, but not to m extensive degree.

CHARLTON, in Singleton parish, and popula, included therein. 2 miles distant N.E.

CHICHESTER, is 621 miles S.W. by S. from London. It is a town and county of itself. The diocese consists of the whole of Sussex. It stands on rising ground, which ground is surrounded nearly on all sides by the Lavant, and a ridge of hills which runs from the Arun to the borders of Hampshire shelters the town from the north and north-east winds. Though called the county-town of Sussex, it is so near the extremity of the county, that it is never used as the assize town, but the county elections are nevertheless carried on there. consists of four principal wide streets, running at right angles from one another. towards the four cardinal points, and they are consequently named North, South, East, and West-streets. At the end of each street was formerly a gate, and, at the point of intersection, in the heart of the city, Bishop Story built, in the year 1475, a handsome cross. This most ornamental piece of architecture is still remaining. It was long used as a kind of market-place, but a market-house having been built; in 1807, it was proposed to take this down as a nuisance! The good taste and public spirit of some of the inhabitants of the town, however, saved it from demolition, and their town from the everlasting reproach that such an act of sacrilege would have entailed upon it. It is supposed by historians that this town existed before the inva-sion of the Romans, and to have been the capital of the Regni. At the close of the fifth century, it was destroyed by Ella, and afterwards rebuilt by his sou, Cissa, the second Saxon king of Sussex, who named it after himself, and made it, during his long reign, his residence and the capital of his kingdom. In the subsequent incursions of the Danes, this place suffered almost total destruction: but, in the reign of William I., the removal of the episcopal sea from Selsca to this place revived its consequence, and, from that time, it has been always an opulent and considerable place. the beginning of the civil wars, an attempt was made by the gentlemen of the southern counties to rouse the people in favour of the royal cause, and it was agreed on, that they should assemble their forces at Chichester. Two small churches without the city were taken down for materials wherewith to put two bastions to the walls of the city for its better defence; but the royalists were disappointed in their muster, and, when besieged by the parliament forces, though resistance was offered, yet it was so feeble, that the enemy soon took possession of the town. Up to this time, Chichester, but particularly the parish of St. Pancras, had monopolized the manufacture of needles; but the mischief done to that perish during the civil war put an end to it here, and it quickly sprang up elsewhere, and be-dame lost to Chichester. The city afterwards became celebrated for its malt: but this trade is also lost, for wast of the advantages which other places possessed. It has now no manufactures, excepting a trifling fabric of woollens. The cathedral and the palace were built in a part of the city granted by Hugh de Montgomery (to whom the city had been granted) in the reign of William I. Stigand, the primate, obtained this grant, in order that be might build a cathedral and babitations for the clergy of the diocese; but his disgrace and death put an end to the work, till Godfrey, the bishop, undertook it. He did little more, however, than begin it, and it was not till the reign of Henry I., that the then bishop, Ralph, mished the undertaking. Being built of wood, it was totally destroyed by fire in 1114. The same bishop, however, Ralph, began directly, and he lived to inish mother and more interinhable building. In 1187, another fire destroyed the roof and much of the inside of this, and a considerable part of the town also. It was renovated, however, and since that time has suffered little damage but what it austained from the parliament forces during the civil wars. It was greatly ornamented in the fourteenth century, under the hands and by the munificence of Bishop Langton, and, subsequently, by his successors. It has some hundsome monuments, but is famed for its paintings. There are, besides the cathedral, six parish churches in Chichester; St. Peter's the-Great, and St. Peter's-the-Less, St. Olave's, St. Martin's, St. Andrew's, and All-Saints. There were before the "reformation," the following religious and charitable institutions in this city :-- " a College of Vicars, with revenues equal now to 6321. 10s. a-year. St. James's Hospital, founded in the reign of King John; rents, in present money, equal to 831. 15s. a year. St. Mary's Hospital, founded for the poor, and the value of which, in the present money, would be 2311. 10s. 10d. a year. Augustine Frisry, founded in the time of Edw. I., by Queen Alinor, and granted by Hen. VIII., in the 32d year of his reign, to Edward Millet. A Dominican Friary, founded in the reign of Hen. III.; granted, by Hen. VIII., to the mayor and citizens." The present cheritable institutions are, one Grammar School, one Free School, and two Charity Schools, an Hospital, and a Dispensary. This city obtained its first charter of incorporation from King Stephen, and it received confirmations of it from Hen. II. and from King John; but it is governed now under one obtained from James II. Its corporation now consists of a mayor, recorder, aldermen, and common council without himitation. The mayor is chosen annually, and he, with three aldermen, act as justices of the peace within the city, and are allowed to hold a court of record every Monday in the Guildhall, for the decision of causes. It returns two members to parliament; the right of election being in the householders paying scot and lot: the number of veters is 690. Chichester contains the following parishes: All-Saints, St. Andrew, St. Bertholomew, St. Martin, St. Olave, St. Pencras (Within and Without), St. Peter-the-Great and St. Peter-the-Less. The population is 7,362. There is a market on Wednesday and Saturday, and the fairs are, May 4, Whit-Monday, Aug. 5, horses and horned cattle; Oct. 20, horses and horned cattle; Oct. 10, horned cattle; second Wednesday in every month, cattle, &c.

WARWICKSHIRE.

An Inland County, bounded on the North by Staffordshire and Leicestershire; on the East by Leicestershire, Northamptonshire, and part of Oxfordshire; on the South by Oxfordshire and Gloucestershire; and, on the West, by Gloucester-, shire, Worcestershire, and Staffordshire. It is about 51 miles long and 38 broad. It is divided into four hundreds, Barlichway, Hemlingford, Kineton, and Knightlow, besides the liberties of Coventry. The rivers by which this county is watered are, the Avon, the Tame, the Leam, the Rea, the Stour, the Alue, the Arrow, the Anker, the Blythe, the Swift. the Cole, and the Dove. The Swift, the Cole, and the Dove. market-towns are, Alcester, Atherstone, Birmingham, Coleshill, Coventry, Henley, Kingston, Nuneaton, Rugby, Shipston, Southam, Stratford, Sutton-Coldfield, Tamworth, Warwick. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, in the Di-OCESES OF LICHFIELD AND COVENTRY,

AND WORCESTER, and in the MIDLAND CIRCUIT. The county returns altogether six members to parliament, two for the shire, two for the city of Coventry, and two for the town of Warwick. It costains 902 square miles, or 577,280 scres, and 205 parishes. It had 42 monestic establishments, and 36 public charities. Of the parishes which this county contains, 10 have no churches; there are 18 which have each less than 100 inhabitants; 43 have no parsonage-houses. and there are 41, the parsonage-bouses of which the incumbents, in a return made to purliament, in 1818; represent as being unit to live in; the poor-rates were; in 1818, 226,4401. 10s. 24d.; the number of propers, $1,564; the rental of the county, according to a return nade to parliament in 1818, was 1,236,7261, 144. 65d., the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 274,392; the sum-ber of inhabited houses, in 1821, was 55,082; the number of uninhabited houses, at the same period, was 2,408; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-fifth, compared with the rental; the number of paupers; compared with the number of houses, is one to every two; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 42,5861.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 305; the number of acres to a person, I; the number of acres to a house, 14; the male population, in 1821, was 133,827; the families employed in agriculture were in number 15,779; the families employed in trade or handicraft were 39,189 in number; the number of other families was 4;155: the agricultural male population, 37,348; able labourers, 18,674; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer, This is not a hilly county, though it is diversified sufficiently by gentle risings to make it very pleasant to the eye. It contains ome of the richest aoil the kingdom; as, for instance, that between Dunchurch and Coventry, and snother tract between Warwick and Coventry. It is a fine red losm on a red sand-stone. The corn crops are immense on these lands, and elm-trees by the sides of the road larger than I ever elsewhere beheld them in England in such situations. The waste-land of the county is very inconsiderable in extent. The woods not large, except on the estates of the gentry; and there they consist principally of oak and elm. The usual crops are, wheat, barley, oats, beans, vetches, and turnips, and the farmers, though they do not adopt the drill hasbandry of Norfolk and Suffolk, keep their land in excellent condition. The proportion of arable to pasture-land is as near as possible equal. The cattle are a long-horned breed, not peculiar to the county, but being the produce of crosses with different breeds. The Warwickshire sheep has been crossed with the new Leicester so much that it now partukes, for the most part, of that breed. There are coal-mines in the breed. neighbourhoods of Bedworth, Chilvers, Coton, and Nuneaton; the best being found at the former of these three places. The manufactures of the county are very great; at Birmingham, all kinds of inferior hardware; at Coventry, ribbons and watches; at Kenilworth, combs; at Warwick, stockings; and at Alcester, needles; and a good deal of linen-yarn is spun in other parts of the county where flax is grown.

- COVENTRY is 10 miles N.N.E. from Warwick, and 91 miles N.W. by N. from London. The Diocese of Lichfield and Coventry consists of the counties of Stafford and Derby, and part of Warwick and Salop. It is a mean-looking town in every way that you enter it, consisting of low and mean houses in its suburbs, and in its interior, of old, cumbrous houses, of the sixteenth century, formed in narrow and crooked streets, without footways, or with footways of scarcely any breadth, and these pitched with small sharp pebbles, in-stead of a flag pevement. The principal parts of the city are seated on rather elevated ground, bounded by two brooks of water, the Radford and the Sherbourn; and it is about three-quarters of a mile long, exclusive of its suburbs. It is of undoubted antiquity, but the antiquarians trace it to the ancient Britons themselves, from the final syllable of its name, try or tre, which latter, in the British language, signifies a town; and the prefix, Covent, or Convent, might populate have been added when the town became distinguished by its mo-mestic institution. Edric, in his inva-sion of Mercia, is said to have found here and destroyed, a house of Nuns, of which St. Ogsburg was then Abbess. Leland says, that Canute found the first Monastery here. On better authority it is asserted, that in the reign of Edward the Confessor, Leofric the Earl of Mercia, and his wife, the Lady Godiva, founded a Monustery on the rains of that of St. Ogsburgh. It was for an Abbot and twenty-four Monks of the Benedictime order, and it quickly surpassed all the others of the kingdom both for magnitude and splendour. At the instance of Godiva, the Earl remitted all tolls of the city, which she represented to him as being a grievous burden upon the citizens. At their deaths, they were buried one on one side, and the other on the other side of the entrance path to the Monastery. In the reign of Edw. III., the inhabitants received permission to levy a toll towards defraying the expenses of building a wall round their town; and, in the reign of Rich. II., the walls, with twelve gates and thirty-two towers, were completed. Of these walls there are but faint traces now remaining, but two of the gates are still standing. Henry IV. held, in 1404, and at Coventry, the parliament which the lawyers called the "lack-learning parliament," they having been prohibited to become members of it. In 1459, another was held there, which acquired the name of Parliamentum Diebolicum, and the whole of the acts of which parliament were afterwards reversed. . Coventry was made a city and county of itself by charter, granted in the year 1451, by Henry VI. This charter was confirmed by Edward IV. According to it, the villages of Anstey, Exhall, Foleshill, Kerealey, Sow (part of), Stivishall, Stoke, and Wyken, are incladed in the county; and, under this charter, the bailiffs are sheriffs of the county, which extends about 34 miles beyond the city in every di-This place has been visited rection. frequently by the kings and queens of England, and many pageants, and other remarkable things, chiefly political, have taken place at or immediately in the vicinity of Coventry. In the wars of Charles I., the Recorder of Coventry raised a small number of citizens to go and join the king at Leicester, but it was so small a number, that he no sooner new the party that the city had meatured in opposition to him, then he was glad to make a hasty escape through the back door of the Bull Ins to save his own person; and very shortly afterwards. the parliament forces garrisoned the town with the consent of the citizens. In 1075, the Bishop of Lichfield moved the seat of that diocese to Chester; and, in 110s, Robert de Limesie, then bishop, moved it thence to Coventry, as it was supposed, tempted by the riches of the monastery of Leofrie. Five succeeding bishops styled themselves Bishops of Country. In 1158, Hugh Novant moved it back to Lichfield; but this caused a dispute between the people of these places, and, neither being willing to give way altogether, it was agreed (in the time of Henry III.), that the clergy of both pieces should have voices in the election of their bishops, who should thenceforward be styled bishops of Coventry and Lichfield. In the reign of Hen. VIII., when the monastery was confiscated, it was provided by Act of Parliament, that the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield should be the sole chapter of the discess of Coventry and Lichfield; and, after the restoration, Bishop Hacket altered the title to that of Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, which it has been ever since. The cathedral, which was like that of Lichfield, with the neighbouring mou tery of Leofric, were levelled with the ground by order of Hen. VIII., and there are but fragments of the ruins new left. They stood on a spot now called Hill-Close. There are new in this city four parish churches, six dissenting meeting-houses, and one Quaker's meeting-house. The charitable institutions now extant in Coventry are, Bablake Hospital, situated behind St. John's Church, founded in the year 1506, by Thomas Bond, Draper; the revenues originally were 491. 11s. 7d., but must. in the present money, be worth 9914 11s. 8d. Grey Friers Hospital, built in the year 1529, by William Ford, for five Poor Men and one Poor Woman; a Free School, founded by John Hales. Before the "reformation," there were. besides Bablake and Grey Frists Hospitals, a Charter-House, founded in 1381. by William Lord Zouch, the rents of which were 2511. 5s. 9ds, new worth 5,0351. 15s.; granted, in the 34th year of Hen. VIII., to Richard Andrew and Leonard Chamberlayne, Bablake College, founded by the burgesses. St.

John's Hospital, built in the reight of Hom. II., by the Archdeston of Coventry, and the yearly value of which was 834, Se. Sd., and would now be 1,668i. 5c.; this was granted to John Hales, who turned the hall of the Hospital into a school-room for his freeschool mentioned above. A Grey Friary, founded, in 1234, by Ralph Earl of Chester, and granted by Hen. VIII., to the mayor and bailiffs of the town. A Carmelite Friary, founded, in 1342, by Sir John Poultney, the yearly income of which was 71. 13s. 8d., and now worth 1531. 13s. 4d.; granted, in the S6th of Hen. VIII., to Ralph Sudler. The city has long been famous for its extensive manufactures; changing, with circumstances, the species of manufacture, but always largely producing and excelling in some one. It is, at the present time, the chief factory of ribbons in England, there being not a less number than 7,000 hands usually employed in it in the town alone, and nearly as many more within its small county; and more watches are said to be made in Coventry than are made in London itself. It is divided into ten wards; and it is governed now by a mayor, ten aldermen, and twenty common-councilmen. It has returned two members to parliament ever since the reign of Edw. I.; the right of election being in the freemen, having served in some trade, within the city or its suburbs: the number of voters is about 5,000. It consists of the two parishes of Holy-Trinity, and St. John-the-Baptist and St. Michael. Their whole population, including that part which extends beyond the city, amounts to $2,147, but that of the city itself is only 21,242. Market, Fri.; fairs, second Friday after Ash-Wednesday, linen and woollen cloth; May 2, horses, cows, and sheep; Friday in Trinity-week, fannels, linen, and woollen, for eight days; first day representing Lady Godivs on horseback; Aug. 26, 27, Nov. 1, linen, woollen, cloth, and horses.

WESTMORELAND.

BOUNDED on the North and North-west by Cumberland; on the Bast by Yorkshire; on the South by Lancashire; and, on the West, by part of Lancashire and part of Cumberland. It is 40 miles long, and 32 broad. It is divided into four wards; namely, East-Ward, Kendal-Ward, Lonsdale-Ward, West-Ward. The principal atvers are, the Eden, the Lowther, the Eamont, the Lon, the Kent, and the Winster. The MARKET-TOWNS are, Ambleside, Appleby, Brough, Burton, Kendal, Kirkby Lonedale, Kirkby Stephen, and Orton. It is in the Province of Your It is in the Province or York, in the Diocusz or Carlisla, and in the NORTHERN CIRCUIT. Westmoreland returns 4 members to parliament; 2 for the county, and 2 for the borough of Appleby. It contains 763 square miles, or 488,320 acres; and 302 parishes. It had 3 monastic establishments, and 25 public charities; it has 3 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants; 28 parishes with no parsonage-houses; 11 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in; the POOR-RATES Were, in 1818, 29,808/. 5s. 8d.; the number of paupers is 3,442; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 298,1981. 17s. 8d.; the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 51,359; the number of inhabited houses, in 1821, was 9,243; the number of uninhabited houses at the same period, 301; the poorrates bear the proportion of one-tenth of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 3 ; the poor-rates, in 1776, were 2,767i.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county is 67; the number of acres to a person, 9; the number of acres to a house, 41. The male population, in 1821, was 25,513; the families employed in agriculture were 5,096 in number; the families employed in trade and handicraft were 3,801 in number; the number of other families was 1,541; the agricultural male population, 12,456; able isbourers, 6,228; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer 78. This county is extremely mountainous, bleak and barren. As much as three-fourths of it are calculated to be in heath and fern, employed in no way but poorly feeding flocks of very inferior sheep. The soil is chiefly a light hazel mould, and the most usual corn crops (where corn crops are cultivated) are barley and oats. In some of the richest parts, such as Heversham, Burton, and Kirkby-Lonsdale, turnips are beginning to be grown for sheep, and wheat forms a part of the rotation of the crops in these neighbourhoods. Woods were formerly prevalent in the county, and, at this time, some of the highest hills are partly covered with oak, ash, alder, and birch. The cattle are chiefly of the Lancashire breed, long-horned, good feeders, and large. The sheep are of two kinds; the ordi-

with thick, course wood. The other, called the Silverdale bread, is also horned, but is white-faced, and has close weel. This is the favourite breed of this sounty. The wool of both kinds is used in the manufacture of knitsteckings at Kendal, Bradford, Kirkby-Shepton, Orton, and Revenstonedale. There were formerly considerable copper and lead mines in this county, as at Westall-Head, Ashby, Martley, and the Dunfell and Dufton mines; but these are nearly all either exhausted or now unused. The coal mines are those of Stanemore-Forest, Leacet, and the Lune Forest. There is but little manufacturing carried on in this county, and what there is, consists chiefly of the knitstockings mentioned above.

Wiltshire returns 34 members to parliament; two for the county, two for the city of Saliabury, and two for each of the boroughs of Belwin, Calne, Chippenham, Cricklade, Devizes, Downton, Heytesbury, lade, Devises, Downson, ..., Marl-Hindon, Ludgershall, Malmsbury, Marl-Weathury, Wilton, Wotton-Basset. It contains 1,379 square miles, or 882,560 acres; and 500 parishes, It had 37 monastic establishments, and 36 public charities; it has 41 panishes with no parsonage-houses; 3 parishes with no churches; 86 parishes, of which the parsonage-houses are want to live in; 28 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants; the Poor-RATES were, in 1818, 274,2641. 101.03d.; the mumber of paupers 29,257; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament, in 1818, was 1,555,4581. 15s. 11\(\frac{1}{2}d.\); the population, according to a return laid before parliament in 1821, was 222,157; the number of inhabited homes, in 1821, was 41,702; the number of uninhabited houses was 1,129 at the same peried; the poer-rates bear the proportion of one-fifth of the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is one to every two; the poor-rates in 1776, were 52,714l.; the number of persons to every square mile of this county, is 161; the number of acres to a person, S; the number of acres to a house, 21; the male popula-tion in 1821, was 108,213; the families employed in agriculture were 24,972 in number; the families employed in trade or handicraft were 16,982 in number; the number of other families was 6,730; the agricultural male population, 55,507; able labourers 27,753; the number of acres in this sounty to svery able-bodied labourer 31. This extensive and rich and beautiful county is divided by common consent, in accordance with a division that nature has made of it, into two districts; North Wilts and South Wilts. North Wilts is the smaller of the two, and consists of all that part which is on the morth of the line that might be drawn from Swimes to Bradford. This district is fat, and exceedingly well-wooded. The soil of this district is generally either a chally loam, or a cold iron clay. The greater and most important district, South Wilts, is all that to the south of Bradford and Swindon. This district consists, with very little exception, of chalk hills or downs; and a very large part, indeed, all that included within a line that might be drawn from Swindon to Bradford, then to Mere, then across to Downton, then to the eastern berder of the county, and then following the border of the county as far as Highworth; all within this line constitutes what is called Salisbury Plains and Marlborough Downs. The soil in this district is chalky upon the high lasds, and black mould in the valleys. It is not much wooded, but is nevertheless beautiful and fertile. The whole of it is high, having the appearance of great swells of the ocean, and the valleys tre proportionably wide. crops are produced in almost every part of this county; but the southern district, above all, is celebrated for its produce of corn; that is, wheat and berley, and of shoop. It was, some years ago, estimated to feed not a less number then 500,000 head of sheep. In North Wilts, towards the borders of Gloucestershire, the cuttle are chiefly long-horned, though, in the great dairy farms of that part, the farmers have latterly used Devonshire cows very much. The cheese of this district is celebrated. In South Wilts the breed of cattle is not much attended to, as the deiries are not large; but the sheep, which constitute so large a part of the wealth of this large and fine district, are of two distinct kinds: the first, and the most common, is the long-legged Wiltshire, a netive breed, and a large and hardy, but a course sort of sheep. The next is the little South Down, which, added to all its other good qualities, has been found sufficiently hardy to bear the bleak winds and sleet of the Wiltshire Downs. There were several forests in Wiltshire formerly, the chief part of them in the northern district of the county; but there still restain three chases; namely, Cranbourn, Vernditch, and Aldbourne; the two former on the southern border, to the west of Downton, and the latter, near Albourne, in the middle of the Marlborough Downs. Besides these, a part of the New Forest of Hampshire extends a little way into Wiltshire, on the east of Downton. But, beside these three or four exceptions, there is scarcely any waste land in the south district of Wilts. In North Wilts there is more, but very little that does not produce good timber, or that would not do so if planted. There are no mines whatever in the county. The manufactures tre,—at Salisbary, fiannels, cutlery, and other steel goods; et Wilton, carpets; at Mere, linen; at Bradford, Trowbridge, Warminster, and Chippenham, broadcloth, kerseymere, and fancy cloths; at Aldbourne, cottons; at Swindon, gloves.

SALISBURY, or NEW-SARUM, is 83 miles S.W. by S. from London. The diocese consists of Wiltshire and Berkshire. It is situated in a fertile valley near the conflux of the Avon, the Nadder, and the Willey, which divide themselves into small streams, and are led through all the principal streets of the city, which streets are wide and regular. It takes its name immediately from Old-Sarum. This Old-Sarum was anciently a town of considerable consequence as a place of a military garrison. It stood at about a mile's distance northward of the present Salisbury, and on a hill. It is supposed to have been founded by the Britons, and then garrisoned by the Romans. It possessed a very strong castle within its fortifications, and a very small part of the ruins of which castle still remain, the only vestige of the ancient town. It 3. is said that Kenric, the son of Cerdic, lived at this place when king of Wessex, about 550, and, about 935, Edgar held a great council at it. The Danes, under Sweine, pillaged and burned it, but . its importance as a military station, caused it to be raised again, and William I. we find calling all the states of the kingdom there to swear allegiance to him; and the see of the diocese was in 1075, removed from Sherborne to this piece. Several succeeding kings made it, at times, their place of residence. The Bishop, Roger, espansed the cause of the Empress Maud, which so enraged the king, that he placed a strong garrison in the town and seized upon the castle, much offending the clergy and citizens; and this is looked upon as the prelude to the eventual fall of the town itself. In the reign of Rich. II., the Bishop, Herbert, projected a second removal of the see, but owing to the king's death, and the intervention of the disturbed reign of John, it was not effected till the reign of Hen. III., when the then Bishop, Richard Poore, fixed upon the site of the present cathedral of Salisbury as an eligible spot, and translated the see. The imbabitants of Old-Sarum speedily followed. and thus arose New Sarum. The foundation of Salisbury cathedral was laid in 1220, by Bishop Poore; large contributions were raised all over the kingdom for carrying on the work, and in the space of thirty-hine years from the time of its commencement, it was finished, and, in 1258, was consecrated in the presence of Henry III. and a large assembly of nobility and clergy. It is a remarkably plain building, but is much admired for the perfection of its proportions, and is renowned for the elegance of its spire, which is 410 feet in height from the ground to its topmost point. There are three parish churches iz Salisbury, besides the cathedral; namely, St. Tho-mas's, St. Edmund's, and St. Martin's. There is here an Infirmary, and there is the Hospital of St. Nicholas, founded by William Longespee, at the suggestion of Bishop Poore, for a Master and eight Poor Women and four Poor Men. Before the "reformation," there were, St. Edmund's College, founded by Walter de la Wyle, Bishop of Saliabury, in 1270, and the revenues of which then were 944. 5s., new worth 1,8851., and granted, in the 38th of Hen. VIII., to William St. Barbe. The College de Vaux, which, with its possession, Hen. VIII. granted to Sir Michael Lister. Vicur's College, incorporated in the 11th of Hen. IV., the reats of which were 471. 18s. 04d., which would now be 9581. Os. 10d. annually. Trinity College, founded for the Sick, in the 17th of Rich. II., by John Chandler. A Dominican Friary, founded by Edward I., and granted, by Hen. VIII., to John Pollard and William Byrte; and a Franciscan Friary, built by one of the bishops

- of the discess, and granted, by Hou. VIII., to John Wroth. Salisbury was first incorporated in the reign of Hen. III., and the charter was confirmed by Queen Anne, who also extended the privileges of the corporation. It is now under the control of a mayor, recorder, and deputy-recorder, twenty-four aldermen, thirty common-councilmen, a townclerk, and three serjeants-at-mace; but the jurisdiction does not extend unto the Close, the dean and camons being magistrates therein. The manor belongs to the bishop, who holds his courts leet and baron in the town-hall. He also appoints the clerk of the peace and the city bailiff. The manufactures of Salisbury are, cutlery and steel goods, fine flannels, woollen serges, and kerseymeres. It sends two members to parliament: the right of election is in the mayor and corporation: the number of voters is 54. . It contains the three parishes of St. Edmund, St. Martin, and St. Thomas, and the population is 8,763. Market, Tues. and Sat.; fairs, Monday before 5th of April, broad and narrow doths, &co.; Whit-Monday and Tuesday, pedlary and horses; Oct. 22, twelfth market, Tuesday after Jan. 6.

WORCESTERSHIRE.

As INLAND COUNTY; bounded on the North by Staffordshire; on the East by Warwickshire; on the South by Gloucester-shire; and, on the West by Herefordshire and Shropshire. It is about 36 miles in length, and about 30 in breadth.
It is divided into five hundreds; namely, Blackenhurst, Doddingtree, Half-' shire, Oswaldstow, and Pershore. Its principal rivers are, the Severn, the i Avon, the Teme, and the Stour; there are also, the Arrow, the Salwerp, the Ledden, and the Rea. The Market-towns are Bewdley, Bromesgrove, Droitwich, Dadley, Evesham, Kidderminster, Per-, shore, Shipston, Stourbridge, Tenbury, Upton, and Worcester. It sends 9 members to parliament; 2 for the county, 2 for the city of Worcester, one for Bewdley, and two each for the boroughs , of Droitwich and Evesham. It contains 729 square miles, or 466,560 acres, and 171 parishes. It had 16 monastic establishments, and 34 public charities; it has 2 parishes with no churches; 12 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants; 21 parishes with no parsonage-houses, 26 parishes with parsonage-houses unfit to live in: the Poor-RATES were, in 1818, 127,5521. Sc. 44d.; the number of PAUPERS is 15,057; the rental of the county, according to a return made to parliament in 1818, was 799,6051.; the population, according to a return laid hefore parliament in 1821, was 184,424; the number of inhabited houses, in '1821, was 34,738; the number of uninhabited houses at the same period '980; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-sixth compared with the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is one to every three; the poor-rates, in 1776, were

26,1561.; the number of persons to ever square mile of this county is 252; the number of acres to a person, 2; the number of acres to a house, 13; the male population, in 1821, was 90,259; the families employed in agriculture were 14,926 in number; the families employed in trade or handicraft were 18,566 in number; the number of other families was 5,514; the agricultural mels population was 34,538; able labourers. 17,269; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer, 27. This county, one of the most fartile, most favoured by nature, with mspect to richness of soil, beauty of fee, and mildness of climate, has both bills, vales, and plains in it. The most consderable hills are, the Malvern hills, an the western border of the county, and the Broadway hills, on the south-eastern border of it. These, but particularly the former, are very lotty ranges of hills. The soil of the county is very various: that of the Malvern hills is light, nearly approaching to sand, and is either planted with firs, or kept as sheep walk. Below these hills the soil is a strong loam, approaching to clay, growing see elm timber, and good crops of corn; putsuing the course of the Severn, that is, from Upton to Bewelley, called the Vale of Severn, the soil is exceedingly rich and almost alluvial; a black mould to some distance from the river on either side. Here are some of the finest, most productive meadows, and some of the finest orchards in the work. Further to the east, the soil is, in parts, a red, light loam, becoming, in other parts, very nearly approaching to a sand. On the Broadway hills, in the south east and north-east parts of the county, the hand is excellent corn said sheep land, but it lies high and bleak, and the enclosures, like those of some parts of the high-lands of Derbyshire, are made by means of stone walls. The waste-land of the county is not very Formerly there were several very large forests; that of Malvern extending from Tenbury to the southern corner of the county in length, and, in breadth, from the river Severn to the summit of the Malvern hills. The produce of the county is, great quantities of grain, good hope, cider, and perry, and fine cattle and sheep. The horned cattle are rather various in sorts, but generally they resemble the Herefordshire very much. The sheep are either those of the Cotswold in Gloucestershire, or a breed very similar to the new Leicester. There are no mines in the county. The manufactures are, curpets at Kiddermineter, and gloves, glass, china-ware, and nails, at Worcester.

- WORCESTER is 1104 miles N.W. by N. from London. The diocese consists of Worcestershire and part of Warwickshire. It is seated on the eastern bank of the Severn, and most parts of it on ground which rises gradually from it. It is one of the most ancient, grand, and opulent towns in England. Its circumference is about four miles, and its neighbourhood is one of the most fertile that can be conceived. It had once a strong wall of circumvallation, with six principal gates, but the traces of these are only to be seen at the back of the Commandery. The streets of the town are broad, well-paved, and handsome. It is supposed to have been a Roman station, or, at least, that part of it which is called Sidbury; but the evidences to this fact are not very strong. There was a very strong and extensive castle there, but, in the reign of Hen. VIII., this was in a completely dilapidated state, and now no fragments are to be seen, except a few in the county jail, which occupies its site. It is supposed to have been built by Urso d'Abot, the first hereditary sheriff of the county. Worcester has suffered severely many times from both war and pestilence. In 1041, Hardicanute ordered it to be burned, and the inhabitants put to the sword, for their refusal to pay the danegelt. Upon this occasion, the inhabitants removed to Bevery, a small island on the Severn, to escape his wrath, and left their town to the pillaging soldiers, who faithfully pillaged and then burned it. By the time of William I.. it was again flourishing; but during the wars between the Empress Maud and King Stephen it was again burned. In the year 1157, it had once more so completely recovered that Henry II. was crowned, for the third time, in its cathedral. In 1263, the barons, under the Earl of Derby, then in rebellion against the king (Henry III.) took it after several assaults, plundered it, and put some of the inhabitants to the sword. In 1265, Edw. I. 'raised his standard here in defence of his father; and, when he came to the throne, he held a parliament here. In the 14th century, it suffered greatly from pestilence, also from the incursions of the Welsh. The cathedral of Worcester is a magnificent building of the simple Gothic order, much admired for its grandeur, and for the external workmanship and decoration The chronological which it displays. history of the cathedral of Wocester is. in very brief, this:—the first church on record in this city was one built in the year 964, by Bishop Oswald, and dedicated to St. Peter. This was burned with the city, in 1041, as related above. Another was erected, which, however, was also burned down in the year 1113; and, a third being built, was burned in the year 1202, together with the adjoining monastery, and a part of the city, but it was rebuilt, and, in the presence of Henry III., an assembly of elergy and nobility, was consecrated by Bishop Sylvester in 1218, to St. Mary. St. Peter, and St. Oncald, and St. Wolstan. It is in the form of a double cross, has a handsome tower rising from the centre, and at every termination of the building, has a very handsome pin-nacle. In the inside are the monuments of many deceased noblemen and gentlemen of the county, and of bishops of the see. Amongst them is that of Judge Lyttleton, the famous lawyer. Near the altar is the tomb of King John, the most ancient existing in England of any of the royal family. On the top is an effigy of that king. holding a sceptre in his right bend, and a sword in his left. Near to this tomb is the chapel of Prince Arthur, containing the remains of that prince, the elder brother of Hen. VIII. The bishop's palace stands not far from the cathedral, and on the bank of the river. It is an ancient building, once surrounded by a strong wall, but it was modernized by Bishop Stillingfleet. There are now nine parish churches besides the cathedral, in Worcester, and there is one Infirmary. There are also the following charities; Berkeley's Hospital, founded, by Judge Berkeley, for twelve Poor Men. St. Oswald's Hospital, said to have been founded by Bishop Oswald, for twelve Poor Women and sixteen Poor Men; this was granted by Hen. VIII., to Christ College at Oxford. Moore's Hospital, educating ten Blue-coat Boys of St. Martin's rarish. Watt's Hospital, for six Por Men. Nash's Hospital, for eight Men and two Women. Trinity Hospital, founded by Queen Elisabeth, for twentynine Poor Women. Shewing's Hos pital, for six Poor Women; and Inglethorpe's, for eight Men and one Woman. There are also a Lying-in Hospital, and a Free School, on the Lancasterian Before the "reformation" there were Whiston Nunnery, with rents equal now to 1,123!. 11s. 8d.; granted, by Hen. VIII., to Richard Callowhile. A Dominican Friary, founded by Beenchamps, of Powike, and granted, by Hen. VIII., to the bailiffs and citizens of Worcester. A Franciscan Friery. built in the year 1268, by Charles of Warwick, and granted, in the 31st of Hen. VIII., also to the bailiffs and citizens of Worcester. The manufactures of this city were formerly of broadcloth and carpets. These have long been extinct, as far as regards Worcester, but they were succeeded by these of gloves and porcelsin. The trade carried on in the former of these two manufactures is so great as to employ 6000 hands constantly; and that, in the latter, though not, perhaps, giving employment to so many, still is a source of wealth to innumerable families and artists. The manufacture itself is second to none in this country. Worcester has been an incorporated city ever since she time of Hen. I. In the reign of Hoo. III., its charter was granted, giving the government of it to two bai-liffs, instead of a constable, who was The former magistrate; and, in 1640, it was empowered to elect a mayor, six alderman, twenty-four common-councilmen, and forty-right assistants, which now constitute the corporation. It sends two members to parliament; the right of election being in the freemen of the city: the number of roters is about It contains the following parishes: All-Saints, St. Albans, St. Andrew, St. Clement, St. Helen, St. Martin, St. Michael, St. Nicholas, St. Peter, and St. Swithin. Their whole population amounts to 19,764, but, as some of them extend beyond the city, its population is only 17,816. The markets are held on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday, and the fairs on Saturday before Palm-Sunday, Saturday in Easterweek, cattle, horses, and linen cloth; Aug. 15, Sept. 19, first Monday in Dec., castle, horses, cheese, lambs, hops, and linen; second Monday in Feb., first Monday in May, June, July, and Nov., for cattle, &c. ## YORKSHIRE.

Yourseith is bounded on the North by Durham and Westmoreland; on the East by the German Ocean, on the South by Chester, Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, and Lincolnshire; on the West by Westmoreland and Lameashire. It is by far the largest county in England, being about 130 miles in length, and about 90 miles in breadth. It is divided into three Ridings; the East, the West, and the North; and these ridings are subdivided into wapentakes. The North Riding has the 12 wapen-takes of Allertonshire, Birdforth, Bulmer, Gilling (East), Gilling (West), Hallikeld, Hang (East), Hang (West), Liberty of Langburgh (East division), Liberty of Langburgh (West division), Pickering-Lythe, wapentake of Ry-dale. The East Riding has the 6 wa-pentakes of Buckrose, Dickering, Harthill, Holderness, Howdenshire, and Ouse and Derwent. The West Riding has the 9 wapentakes of Abridge, Barkston-Ash, Claro, Morley, Osgoldress, Chysack, Staineliff.

and Tickhill. Its rivers are the Ure, or Ouse, the Wiske, the Swale, the Nid, the Derwent, the Calder, the Aire, the Don, the Humber, and the Ribble. The market towns are, Abberford, Aldborough, Askrigg, Barnsley, Bawtry, Bedale, Beverley, Bingley, Boroughbridge, Bradford, Bridlington, Cawood, Cave (South), Deht, Dewsbury, Doncaster, Driffield, Esingwold, Gisburn, Guisborough, Halifix, Hawes, Hedon, Helmsley, Hornsea, Howden, Huddersfield, Hall, Keighley, Kettlewell, Kingston upon Hull, Kirkby-Moorside, Knaresborough, Leeds, Leyburn, Alalton, Marsham, Middleham, Northallerton, Otley, Patrington, Pately-Bridge, Penistone, Picketing, Poekhington, Pontefract, Reeth, Richmond, Ripley, Ripon, Rotherham, Scarborough, Sedbergh, Selby, Settle, Sheffield, Sherborne, Skipton, Sanith, Stokesley, Tadcaster, Thirk, Thorne, Wakefield, Weighton, Wetherby, Whitby, Yarm, York. This county sends shire, two for the city of Yerk, and two for each of the boroughs of Aldborough, Beverley, Boroughbridge, Hedon, Kingston-upon-Hull, Knaresborough, Malton, Northallerton, Pontefract, Richmond, Ripon, Scarbo-rough, and Thirsk. It contains 5,961 square miles, or 5,814,940 acres, and 613 parishes. It had 127 monastic establishments, and 240 public charities; it has 8 parishes with no churches at all; 27 parishes with less than 100 inhabitants in each; 259 parishes with no parsonage-houses; 136 parishes in which the parsonage-houses are, according to a return made to parliament by the incumbents in the year 1818, unfit for them to dwell in; the poorrates were, in 1818, 829,717l. 12s. 84d.; the number of paupers, 66,153; the rental of the county, according to a re-turn made to parliament in 1818, was 4,727,9781. 2s. 11d.; the population, according to a return laid before the parliament in 1821, was 1,173,185; the number of inhabited houses in 1821 was 224,469; the number of uninhabited houses at the same period was 9,342; the poor-rates bear the proportion of one-fifth compared with the rental; the number of paupers, compared with the number of houses, is 1 to every 4; the poor-rates, in the year 1776, were annually only 71,7081.; the number of persons to every square talle of this county is 197; the number of acres to a person, 3; the number of acres to a house. 16; the male population, in 1821, was 584,456; the families employed in agriculture were in number 63,830; the families employed in trade or handicraft were 137,048 in number; the number of other families was 39,818; the agricultural male population, 154,991; able labourers, 77,495; the number of acres in this county to every able-bodied labourer, 49. The word riding is said to be a corruption of trithing, a Saxon word, meaning the third part of a county. The East Riding has a considerable tract of country, called the Welds, running down the middle of it from north to south, from a little to the west of Hunmanby to Driffield, and thence to Pocklington, being a tract of high lands, consisting altogether of about 400,000 scres. These high lands have deep and beautiful val-leys intermixed here and there in them. On the eastern side of them, as well as on the western, the face of the country is level. The soil of this riding is, in the wolds, a light loom, with a mixture of chalky gravel. This is, in some places, very shallow, in others deep and very fertile; to the east of the wolds the soil is gravel, hazel mould, or strong loam, with clay, and, to the west, gravelly, sandy, and clayer loans are all found, and in every possible variety. This latter district is well wooded. The crops produced in this riding are, wheat, barley, oats, turnips, and beans. On the wolds the usual course is, 1. turnips; 2. barley with seeds; 3.4. grass; 5. wheat. In the low lands, beans and peas may be added to the foregoing. The cattle of this district have long been very famous: they are short-horned, clean in the throat, of a light red, or black-and-white colour, and very large and heavy, and excellent feeders. The horses are famed all the world over. The West Riding, like the East, seems also to be naturally divided into three districts; the marshy, the midland, and the mountainous; the former is the eastern border of this riding, the border being marked out by the river Ouse, which has on its western bank a considerable tract of excellent marshy land; the second is all the middle of the riding, as far westward as Ripley, Otley, Bradford, and Sheffield; it is a beautiful and fertile district, not flat ner very hilly, but comprising a series of gently-rising ground, very finely variegated. Further west than the four towns above-named, the coastry becomes rugged, and even mountainous, but it has its beautiful and fertile valleys too. Of this riding the corn growing district is that to the east-ward of the line in which stand the four towns above-mentioned; and from Ripley to the western border of the county nearly the whole available land is under pasture. This riding produces more wheat than the other two. The moors lie on the western border, and constitute nearly an eighth of the riding. The tattle of this riding are of two distinct kinds; the short-borned, in the eastern part, and the long-horned, or craven. in the weatern; these, with crosses between the two, are the sort principally seen here, but a good many Scout steers are brought into the county, nevertheless, to be fatted on the pasturelands. Very few horses are bred in the West Riding, and those few are small draught animals. The sheep here are of all descriptions. The native sheep is a breed from off the mestern moors, horned, and light; but very bardy. By crossings, this animal has been converted to bear a similarity with the Disbley, the Lincoln, and the Leicester breeds. The North Riding is very rugged and mountainous. From Scarborough to very near Whitby(sea-coast) the cliffs are very bold, and a district of mountains is comprised within the line that might be drawn from Whitby to Stokesley, and thence to Thirsk, and then through Helmsley, Kirkby-Moor-side, and Pickering, back to Searborough. This block of moorlands is about thirty miles long and about fifteen broad. Some beautiful and very rich valleys run through this barren and bleak district; and, with the exception of these moors, the generality of the land of the North Riding is fine corn-growing and turnip-growing ground. Some is clayey, some gravelly, some strong alluvial soil, and some sandy. The usual rotation of crops, taking the generality of the riding is, fallow, wheat, oats, and, occasionally, beans and peas. The pastureground, except in the western part of this riding, is but scanty in quantity and is ill-managed. The cattle of the North Riding are inferior to none, excepting the Tees-water breed, which are found chiefly in the vale of York; and in that part of it called Ryedale, as well as in the Marishes, and on the Howardian hills, a great many head of cattle are bred. The sheep are crossed with the Lincoln and Leicester so much that the original breeds of Cleveland and the vale of York are scarcely now to be found in their purity. Cleveland and the vale of York are the two most famous districts for horses, as well as other animals. Lead, alum, copper, and coals, are found in abundance in the North Riding; and, in the West, are fine coal and lead mines. The manufactures of Yorkshire are in the West Riding; they are very great, and chiefly of the staple commodity of broad-cloth.

- This encient and renowned city YORK. is 1994 miles N. by W. from London. It is the metropolitan city of the north of England, and has the dioceses of Durham, Carlisle, Chester, Sodor-and-Man, and York, within its province. The discose of York comprises three-fourths of the shire, the county of Nottingham, and five churches and chapels a Morthumberland, together with many decatives, with the neighbouring distrist, of about thirty-two miles in circumference, called the Ainsty. York forms a county of itself, called the county of the city of York. The Ainsty is a district, a considerable part of which was enciontly a forest; but it now forms a part of the vale of York, the western part of it hilly and of various soils, and the eastern part a complete flat of most expellent pasture. In this district there stand, besides the city, thirty-four villeges and hamlets, and a part of the town of Tadoastar. The city itself is situated on the river Ouse, which, having been formerly called the Eure, is supposed to have given it the name of Eurewic senget the Sazens : Eure, the name of the river, and wic, being in Saxon the name for a place of refuge or retreat, and, from this, York. But it was, without doubt, a place of great importance in the time of the Romans, under the me of Eborerum, and was the residence of the emperors Adrian, Severus, and Constantius Chiores successively. The historians assert that there were a emple and a palatium erected by the Romans here, and, notwithstanding the city has more than once been destroyed se that time, there remain two bits of rains, an arch in Michegate-Bar, and a terror in the wall of the Mint-

Yard, both of which are deemed to be works of the Roman era. The present city of York stands on the site of the Eboracum of the Romans, and it is still impossible to move the earth of almost any quarter of it, without turning up burnt earth, cinders, or fragments of pavement, and so forth. As it now stands, this city is about 2‡ miles in circumference. The entrances to it are by four main gates, and five smaller ones, the former are called, Micklegate-Bar, Bootham-Bar, Monk-Bar, and Walmgate-Bar. All these gates are very ancient, and are still standing. There are six bridges, one over the Ouse, and the other five over the Foss. The streets have been much improved of late years by the taking down of many old houses. It is believed to have been a town of some consequence of the Britons; but, under the Romans, it became a place of real consequence, having many churches (besides other public buildings) erected by them. In the wars that followed their departure from England, and before the establishment of the Saxon dominion, York had been more than once destroyed; so that, when the Saxons were converted to Christianity, there was no place of worship in the city, and Edwin, the then king, caused a temporary church of wood to be erected. About the ninth century it appears to have become a place of opulence, and the seat of the learning of those times; but in the ravages of the Danes, it suffered dreadful havoc under Inguar and Ubbs, two Danish chiefs, who laid it almost waste, and put many of the inhabitants to the sword. They then rebuilt it, and made it their capital. William I. was so obstinately opposed by the people of York, that he went in person to lay seige to it, but it held out against him six months, which so enraged him, that when he became possessed of it, he ordered it be razed to the ground, and had many of the principal inhabitants put to death. It lay in ruins for a time, and is scarcely mentioned in history for nearly a century from this time; but, by the time of King Stephen, it had undoubtedly raised itself again to great consequence, for, in June 1137, it was, with 39 parish churches, nearly destroyed by an accidental fire. In subsequent reigns, it was frequently visited by the kings of England. Henry II held parliaments there in 1160 and 1171. During the reigns of John and of Hen. III., it was the place of meeting between these monarchs and the kings of Scotland, and several parliaments also were held then during the reigns of these kings. Is 1251, the daughter of Hea. Ill. was married to Alexander, king of $cotland, in the cathedral church of St. Peter at York. In 1298, the Barons assembled at York, and the king's confirmation of Magna-Charta and the Charter of Forests was read by the Bishop of Carlisle, who prosounced a curse on those who should mining either. It was frequently the place of temporary residence of the kings. Rich. Il. granted it charters and great privileges; and he, in 1389, took his sword from his side, and gave it to be borne before the lord-mayor on state occasions. In 1392, he presented the first meet, to be borne before the lord-mayor; and, in 1396, he appointed two sherifs, in-stead of the bailiffs of the city. When Rich. III. had usurped the crown, be came to York, which showed him great favour, and there he was crowned, in the second time, in its cathedral, by And, stee Archbishop Rotherham. after the death of Richard, this city showed its attachment to him, by outtinuing hostile to Hen. VII. Heary VIII. established a president and council with great powers, under the great seal of over and terminer, within the counties of York, Durham, Northun-berland, and divers cities. This continued till the time of Charles L. la 1604, it suffered much from the plague. and, in 1644, during the civil wars, the royalists were completely routed on Marston-Moor, within five or aix miles of York: the parliament forces then besieged the city, and, in eightest weeks, took possession of it. The cathedral church of St. Peter's, er, soit is otherwise called, York-Minster, has long been esteemed the finest piece of church architecture in the kingdon. The history of this cathedral is shortly stated to be this: when Edwin, hing of Northumberland, about the year 600. was converted to Christianity by his wife Ethelburga, aided by Bishop Paullinus, he had no place of worthin within his capital, York. He begin building a cathedral, but was shortly after slain in battle by Pends, the kill of Mercia. About the year 634, 0 wald, then the king of Northumberland. finished the building which Edwin had begun. This prince was also killed in battle by Penda, who destroyed part of the city of York, and partly demolished the newly-completed cathedral, 669, Bishop Wilfrid repaired the walls anew, and covered the roof with lead. In 1069, it was destroyed by fire, with meny other churches. This was done partly by accident; for the town being at the time besieged by the Northumbrians and the Danes, the governor, William Mallet, the better to defend the citadel, ordered some houses which lay contiguous to it to be burned; but the fames, spreading into the neighbouring streets, reduced almost the Thomas, whole city to ashes. Beyoux, being made archbishop in the year following, began rebuilding the cathedral on a larger scale; but it had hardly stood half a century before another are, in 1137, destroyed it. Archbishop Roger, in 1171, began rebuilding the choir, and he lived to see that part completed; but the whole has been renewed since that time, that is, in the reign of Hen. III.: the south transept was built by Archbishop Walter de Grey. In 1260, the north transept was built by John le Romain. In 1290, the nave was begun by Archbishop le Romain (son of the preceding), who saw it finished in 1330. The work was carried on by William de Merton, the forty-second archbishop of York, and he anished the west end and the steeples. The original choir of Roger appearing to Archbishop Thorseby not to correspond in grandeur with the parts added by the successors of that bishop, he took it down, in 1361, and rebuilt it in perfect conformity with the rest of the edifice, which was now complete. In December, 1829, this work of ages was set on are by a maniac of the name of Martin, and a considerable pert of it uttorly destroyed. York now contains twenty-four parish churches, besides the cathedral; and it has the following charitable institutions :- a County Hospital, a Lunatic Asylum, a Dispensary, and 2 Schools, one for boys and the other for girls. Before the "reformation, it contained the following hospitals and religious houses:—St. Mary's, a Benedictine Abbey, founded and endowed by William Rufus. St. Clements, a Benedictine Convent, founded by Archbishop Thurston, and granted, by Hen. VIII., to Edward Skipwith. St. Andrew's, a Gilbertine Priory, founded by Hugh Murdue, in 1200, and granted, by Hen. VIII., to John Bellew and John Broxholm. Trinity or Christ-Church, an Alien Priory, founded by

Ralph Painell, in 1069, and granted, by Hen. VIII., to Leonard Beckwith. All-Saints, a Benedictine Cell, built by William Rufus, and completely demolished at the "reformation." dera, a College, founded in 1252, by Archbishop Walter Gray. St. Sepulchre's College, founded by Bishop Roger. St. William's College, founded by Neville Earl of Northumberland, in 1460, and granted, by Edw. VI., to Michael Stanhope and John Bellew. Boutham Hospital, Fossgate Hospital, founded in the 45th year of Edw. III., for the Poor; and it is still in being. St. Nicholas's Hospital, seid to have been founded by the Empress Maud, for Lepers. St. Peter's, or St. Leonard's Hospital, founded by King Stephen, and granted, by Queen Elizabeth, to Lord Dudley. St. Thomas's Hospital, founded in 1391, and still standing. An Augustine Friery, founded in 1278, by Lord Scroop; granted to Thomas Rawson. A Franciscan Friery, founded by Hen. II., and granted by Hen. VIII., to Leonard Beckwith. A Carmelite Friary, founded in 1255, by Lord Vesey and Lord Percy, and granted, by Hen. VIII., to Ambrose Beckwith. There is no manufacturing carried on at York: its commerce is carried on with the great advantage of water carriage, as large vessels can navigate the Ouse quite up to the city. It is the metropolis of the north of England, and abounds in gentry; and, at the fair, the racing, and the absize times, with innumerable strangers. It is governed by a lord mayor and aldermen, a recorder, two sheriffs, a privycouncil, called the council of twentyfour, a common council, consisting of seventy-two members, six chamberlains. with a city steward, and many inferior It returns two members to officers. parliament: the right of election being in the freemen, being free by patrimony, servitude, purchase, or by gift of the corporation: the number of voters is about 3,200. York contains the following parishes: All-Saints North-Street, All-Saints Pavement, St. Andrew, St. Crux, All Saints, Pesseholm, St. Cuthbert, St.-Helen-on-the-Walls. St. Dennis, St.-Giles-in-the-Suburbs, Helen-Stonegate, Holy-Trinity, Goodramgate, Holy-Trinity, King's-Court, otherwise Christ-Church, Holy-Trinity, Micklegate, St.-John-Delpike, St. John, Micklegate, otherwise Ousbridge-End, St. Lawrence and St. Nicholas. ## WALES.

Wales is called a peninsula, though it can scarcely be said to come within the manning of that term; a peninsula being the name in geography for a part of any maidland which is nearly divided from it by water. This is not the case with Welen, though the Iftish channel on the north, and the Bristol channel on the south, do intersect a little between Weles and the mainland of England. It is a meantainous tract of land on the western coast of England, bounded by the Bristol channel, and on the east by the counties of Mogmouth, On the south by the Bristol channel, and on the east by the counties of Mogmouth, Strengthes, Hemford, and Chester; being in length about 165 miles, and in breadth about 65; but, for a general description, the reader will turn to the respective counties, where the soils and products are fully stated. I must here, however, notice that, with regard to Wales, I am compelled to deviate from the plan that I have pursued with regard to the counties of England; that is, I give the total emount of population, of restal, and other same, taking the whole principality in the aggregate, and mot according to the respective counties, as in England.

There are, then, in the whole of Wales 7,425 square miles, or 4,752,000 acres; 1,043 parishes; 68 market-towns; for the whole, 24 members of parliament; there was before the Reformation 41 monastić establishmests; and there are now altogether 92 schools, almahouses, &c. There are 53 parishes that have no church at all; 107 parishes which contain each less than a hundred people; 364 parishes without parsonage-houses, and 127 parishes in which the paragange-houses are unfit to live in. The poor-rates of Wales amounted, in 1818, to the annual sum of $85,060i. So. 45d.; the number of paypers to 42,240; and the annual rental, at the same time, 2,153,801i. 2s. 7d. The population, in 1821, was 717,438; the number of inhabited houses, 136,183; of uninhabited houses, 3,652. The poor-rates have the proportion of one-seventh of the rantal; and the number of paspers, compared with the number of houses, was one to every three. The poor-rates in Wales, in the year 1776, amounted to 32,504. The number of persons to a square mile is 82; the number of acres to a person, 7; the number of acres to every house, 32; the male population, in 1821, was 350,487; the number of families employed in agriculture, 74,225; families employed in handioraft, 41,680; the sumber of other families, 30,801; the number of agricultural males, 180,728; the number of able labourers, 90,814; the number of acres of land to every able labourer, 49.

Wales, which is called the Principality of Wales, was long an independent severeignty, was conquered by EDWARD I. and annexed to the crown of England. To give enything like a sketch even of the history of this division of England would take up more room than the pages of such a work as this will admit of; but still it is proper that the reader should be informed, from suthentic sources, of the time and the manner of incorporating this county with England, and also that he should know what changes have subsequently taken place in the acts of incorporation. For this purpose, I shall insert here an extract from Mr. BERVES'S excellent "History of the English Law," and here the rester will find the substance of the most important acts faithfully given.

"Such of the Britons as had fled from the Saxon invasion into Wales, preserved there, together with their language, and the blood-royal of their kings, their accent laws and government. The descendants of Cadwallader are said to have governed in that country during all the Saxon times. When William the Conqueror established hisself in England, three princes, descended from that ancient British king, reigned over Wales, then divided into three sovereignties; and kept possession of their respective dominions, in defiance of the Conqueror and his successors. The way in which our kings carried on war with this people, was to make a grant to certain great lords of such countries in Wales as they could win from the Welshmen. Many great lordships were by this policy conquered; and the lords held them to them and their heirs of the kings of England, as lands purchased by conquest. Such was the origin of Lords Marcien, who assumed every authority and prerogative that was necessary for the due execution of the laws within their respective lordships. These new establishments had a tendency to introduce the English law; which was either mixed with the Welsh, or prevailed in certain places, and with respect to certain persons, in its pure state. In some lordships, in consequence of the singular mixture and mutual toleration of the laws last mentioned, the English and Welsh resorted to separate and distinct courts of judicature.

"The lords marchers increased in number, till Llewelyn ap Gryffydh, the last prince of Wales, was slain in the eleventh year of this king. (Edw. I.) Upon this event Edward took the principality into his hands, and gave it to his son, afterwards Edward II. Since that time no more lordships marchers were erected; the Welsh in general similting themselves to the kings of England. Edward soon held a parliament at Ruthla Castle, and there brought forward the following statute, for appointing a juridical establishment.

lishment in Wales similar to that in England.

"The statutum Wallie begins the arrangements it is about to make, by stating what we conceived to be the political condition of that country at the time. It says, that Wallie with its inhabitants had hitherto been subject to the king jure feudali; but that now, by Divine Providence, it had fullen in proprietatis dominium, and was annexed and united in the crown of Eugland as a part of the same body. The king therefore, wishing that the people inhabiting Sacudos, et alias terrus nostras in partibus illis (for to such it was castined, and did not extend to all Wales, as it is now called), who had submitted therefore, but the king de alio et basso, should be governed by certain laws as the rest of his dominions, had caused the laws and customs of that country to be rehearsed before himself and his nobles. Some of these, by the advice and counsel of his nobles, were abolished; some were permitted to remain; some were altered, and other new ease were ordained: this alteration and modification of the Welsh law was as follows:—

"First, respecting the magistrates and officers of justice it was ordained, that the justitiarius de Snaudon should have the keeping of the king's peace there and in the puts adjacent, and should administer justice according to the king's writs, hereafter to be mentioned. Further, that there should be sheriffs, coroners, and bailiffs of commotes, a Snaudon and the parts adjacent; that there should be a sheriff in Anglesse, one in Conarvon, one in Merioneth, and one in Flint; the jurisdiction of which last was to extend to the town of Chester; and he was, for the future, to be attendant on the king's justifiarius of Chester (which officer of justice of Chester is mentioned as existing in the former reign), and should be answerable for issues at the exchequer of Chester. Coroner were in future to be elected in these counties by the king's writ, inserted in the status for that purpose; bailiffs of commotes were to be appointed; and they are thereby enjoined to do their duty, as directed by the justifiarius and the sheriff. Besides the above sheriffs, who were appointed for Snaudon and the parts adjacent, the status directs, that there should be a sheriff in Carmarthen, and another in Cardigen and Languager, together with coroners and bailiffs of commotes, as in the former.

"As to the coroners, it was ordained, that there should be one at least in every commote, who should be chosen in pleno comitatu by the usual writ, and be sworn before the sheriff to be faithful to the king, and discharge the office of coroner with sechty. Then the manner of holding inquisitions super visum corporis, and other parts of his office, in making appeals, abjurations, and the like, are described in the same way at the office of coroner in England. After this account of officers and their duty, there follow forms of the most common original writs for the use of the inhabitants of Wales.

"Some alterations and regulations were made concerning property. It had not been the custom in Wales for women to have a title to dower; but now it was declared, that in future they should have dower. Inheritances that had been partible smong the beirs time out of mind, were to continue in the same manner as had been before used; only bastards were no longer to be allowed to inherit. Women, being coheiresses, were in future to have their equal shares of the inheritance, though contrary to the former custom of Wales. The people of Wales had expressly prayed that the following regulations might be established:—first, that the truth of a fact might be inquired of by good and lawful men of the vicinage, chosen by the consent of parties: secondly, that in all actions for moveables, as upon contracts, debts, suretiships, covenants, trespasses, chattels, and the like, they might still retain the Welsh usage; which was, that when a matter could be proved per audientes et videntes, and a plaintiff had brought witnesses so qualified, whose testimony could be depended on, to prove his declaration, he should recover his demand against the adverse party; and in cases where there could not be a proof per sudientes et videntes, that the defendant should be put to purge himself with a greater or less number, according to the quantity and quality of the thing or fact: thirdly, that in thefits, if a person was taken with the thing in his hand, he should not be suffered to purge himself, but be judged pro convicto: all which were granted, except only in cases of thest, burning, murder, homicide, and manifest and notorious robberies, in which the order of the law of England was to be observed. The king affixed his seal to it, and so executed it rather in the form of a charter than an act of parliament. Thus was the judicial polity of the principality settled in the form in which it continued till the reign of Hen. VIII., when some further steps were taken for uniting it more closely with England, by a fuller participation of our laws."

The statute here referred to is the 12th Edward I. Under this statute the principality was governed till the reign of Henry VIII., when divers others were enacted, making a more complete division of the country into counties, drawing it more closely to England, by assimilating the courts and laws to those of England, and giving the king more unlimited authority over it. These acts were the 26th, 27th, 34th, and 35th of Hen. VIII.; the principal provisions of which latter are summed up by Mr. Rexves, vol. 4, p. 200.

"The provisions of this act are said to have been granted at the humble suit and petition of the king's subjects in Wales. It declares, that Wales, consistent with the late revolution effected there, should consist of twelve counties; the eight ascient counties, that is, Glamorgan, Carmarthen, Pembroke, Cardigan, Flint, Carnarven, Anglesca, and Merioneth; and the four new ones, that is, Radner, Brecknock, Mentgemery, and Densigh; and that the limitations of hundreds, as settled by the commissioners appointed seconding to the late act (27 Hen. VIII.) should be observed.

"As to the judicature of the country, it directs, that there should continue a president and council, as before; that a sessions, to be called the hing's great sessions in Wales, shall be held twice a year in every country; that this court shall hold pleas of the srown in as ample manner as the king's bench; and pleas real, personal, and mixed, as completely as the common-pleas in England. The detail of regulations made by this act may be stated briefly, as follow: the sessions is to last six days; days are to be given from day to day, and from sessions to sessions, at the discretion of the justices. There is to be an original and judicial seal (for the different circuits), to seal all original and judicial write and processes; the tests of every bill and judicial process to be under the names of the justices. All actions, real and mixed, are to be by original. Personal actions above forty shillings, may be either by original or by bill; those under are to be always by bill. Original bills are to be sealed with the judicial seal. Fines of land with proclamations levied before justices there, are to be of the same force as fines in the common-pleas. Errors of judgments before the great sessions in pleas real and mixed, are to be brought by writ of error into the king's bench in England; in pleas personal, to be reformed by bills before the president and council. No execution to be stayed by writ of false judgment; but in case the judgment is reversed, restitution is to be made. When there are many personal actions which cannot be tried at the great sessions, it was ordained, that, for dispatch, they may be heard at a petty sessions before the deputy justices, under twenty shillings. The fees of officers, for the execution of process and drawing the proceedings, were fixed by the statute, with authority however to the justices to alter them at their discretion.

"In order to combinate to Wales all the privileges enjoyed by English subjects, it was ordered by stat. 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, that two knights should be chosen for the county, and one burgess for the town of Monnouth; that one knight should be chosen for the county of Brecknock, Radnor, Montgomery, and Denbigh, and for every other county in Wales; and one burgess for every shire town, except Marioneth. These effections were to be as in England, with the same fees and allowances.

"There was a statute for better ordering the collection of the wages of handle and hurgesses in Wales and Monmouth. It seems that the wages of a handle was new four shillings a-day, that of a burgess two shillings, and it continued from their cetting out to their return home, with the cost of their write, and other fees and charges. There were two writs; one, de solutione fadi militis parliaments; and another, de solutione fadi burgensis parliamenti. These used to be sued out by the member; and by this act the sheriff, mayor, or other head-officer, was to make his payment within two months after such writ delivered to him."

Wales contains the four bishoprios of St. David's, Llandaff, Bangor, and St. Asseph, the greater part being in the Province of Canterbury.

By an Act of the first of WILLIAM IV. c. 70, an alteration is made in the administration of justice, by abolishing the Welsh circuits and Welsh judges, and adopting for all Wales and Chester two circuits, called the Northern Circuit and the Southern Circuit, and adding three new judges to the English bench, which bench of judges now perform their functions over Wales as well as England. This is the last act of the English perfiament concerning the principality, which is thus closely incorporated with England.

ANGLESEA.

An island and county in North Wales, separated from Caernarvonshire, by a long narrow strait, called the Menai, and, on the other side, bounded by the Irish sea; about 24 miles long, and 18 broad. It has a few small streams, but no rivers. It is divided into six hundreds: Llyfon, Mattreath, Menai, Talybolion, Turcelyn, and Tyndæthwy. It has four market towns, Newburgh, Beaumaris, Llanerchymedd, and Holyhead; and it is in the Province of Canand in the Northern Circuit. seeds two members to parliament, one for the county, and one for the town of Beaumaris. This county is said to have formerly borne the Welsh name of Yyns Dowyll (the Shady Island), from its numerous groves; these groves, however, do not exist now, the general feature of the county being bareness of wood, and flatness rather than hilliness. The agriculture of it has been much improved of lase; its soil is, for the most part, a good sandy loam, yielding good barley and oats, and producing food for a great deal more cattle than is consumed in the county. The coast is abundant in fish of several kinds, and mines of coal, lead, and copper, are worked; and it has no manufacturing towns. Some linen and woollen cloths are made, but by individuals, and for their own use.

BRECKNOCKSHIRE.

A countr of South Wales, bounded on the North by Radnorshire, on the East by Herefortishire and Monmouthshire, on the South by Monmouthshire and Glamorganshire, and on the West by Cardiguashire and Carmarthenshire. It is about 35 miles long and 30 broad. Its principal rivers are the Uake, the Wye, the Irvon, the Tawe, and the Taf. It is divided into six hundreds; namely, Builth, Crickhowel, Devyn-nock, Merthyr, Penkelly, and Tulgarth. It has four market-towns; Brecon, Builth, Crickhowel, and Hay. It is in the Province of Canterbury, in the Diocess of Llandaff, and in the Southern Circuit. It sends two members to parliament, one for the shire, and one for the town of Brecknock. This county is, like most of the Welsh counties, mountainou It is crossed in two directions by rest of lofty hills; one being called the Eppynt-Hills, the other Bannan Brechanog, or the Brecknockshire-Beacons. Another chain, not so extensive, is called Talgarth, or the Black Mountains. The whole county consists of hill and dale, and the soil is various accordingly. The vale of Usk is a sandy loam; the northern part of the county is stiff less mixed with clay; the vale of Wyr is a brown and gravelly loam of good quality. The agriculture of this county is defective: a great deal of Rye is grown. but the rotation in some of the best parts is fallow, wheat, peas or barley, oats, and turnips. The cattle, homes, and the sheep of the county are small; the latter grazing in great flocks upon the mountain sheep-walks. The breed of all these animals is mending, however, very fast, by crossing with the breeds of the neighbouring county of Hereford. The comparative goodness of the vales and the mountains may be estimated pretty accurately by the fact that, whereas the vales let frequently at from fifteen shillings to a guines an acre, the mountains do not let for more than from three to seven shillings an acre. There are no mines in the county, but there are excellent quarries of stone for building and roofing houses. The manufactures are inconsiderable, and only for home use.

The population of the town is 4,193, but the whole of that of the parishes, a part of which extends beyoud the town, amounts to 4,379. Market, Wed. and Sat.; fairs, May 14, July 5, Sept. 6, Nov. 17, leather, hops, cattle, &c. A corporate town, having two bailiffs, twelve aldermen, and fifteen common-councilmen. Sends one member to parliament; right of election in the corporation and free burgesses: number of voters, nearly 300. Here there were a Benedictine Priory, built in the reign of Hen. I., by Bernard de Newmarch; yearly income 1841. 11s. 4d., now worth 2,6911. 6s. 8d., granted, by Hen. ## CARDIGANSHIRE.

A COURTY of South Wales, bounded on the North by Merionethshire and Montgomery, on the East by Radnorshire and Brecknockshire, on the South by Carmarthenshire, and on the West by the Irish sea. It is about 40 miles long, and 20 broad. The principal river is the Tivy. It is divided into five hundreds; Geneurglyn, Har, Moddyn, Pennarth, and Troedyroyr. It has five market-towns; Aberystwyth, Cardigan, Lampeter, and Tregaron. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, in the DIOCESE OF St. DAVID's, and in the SOUTHERN CIRCUIT. It sends two members to parliament; one for the shire, and one for the town of Cardigan. The southern and western parts of this county are more level than the generality of Wales, but in the northern part it is mountainous, barren, and bleak. In the level district, the higher parts are of a sandy fertile loam, upon a substratum of a blue, slatey rock. In the valleys the loam is much darker, and is stiff and deep. The crops are princi-- pally wheat, barley, oats, turnips, and potatoes. The northern district of the county is composed of bleak, dreary hills, which are either waste, middling pasture, or plantation. The waste and the pasture afford grazing of poor quality for an innumerable quantity of the little black cattle which we see in almost every fair in England, and which, from their superior hardiness, are used as milch cows in some of the bleakest parts of our country. Very large flocks of a small kind of sheep are also pas-tured on these hills. There are lead tured on these bills. mines in the neighbourhood of Aberystwith, which formerly produced considerable quantities of silver. The chief commerce of the county consists of its exports of this lead, of wheat, oats, and butter, all to the Bristol markets. Coarse stockings and flannels are the only manufactures, and these are chiefly for home use.

CARMARTHENSHIRE.

A COUNTY of South Wales, bounded on the north by the Severn Sea, or St. George's Channel; on the east by Brecknock and Glamorgan; on the south by Curdiganshire; and on the west by Pembrokeshire. It is 40 miles long, and 20 broad. The chief rivers are Towy, the Cothy, and the Tave. It is divided into eight hundreds, namely, Carnwallon, Carthinog, Cayo, Derliis, Elvett, Iskewnen, Kirkwelly, and Perfedd. It has one borough, and four other market-towns, namely, Carmarthen (the borough), Kidwelly, Llandilo-faur, Llandovery, and Newcastle. It is in the Province of CANTERBURY, in the Diocese of St. DAVID'S, and in the SOUTHERN CIRcuit. It sends two members to parliament, one for the shire, and one for the borough of Carmarthen. This county is also mountainous. It has a range of mountains on the north, skirting the border of Brecknockshire; on the eastward, it has the continuation of the chain called the Black Mountains, and the Bettwa Mountains stand further southward, on the borders of Glamorganshire, A large part of the county is waste, it is pretty well wooded, and a great part of the cultivated part is still uninclosed. With the exception of the mere mountains, it is generally fertile, and the farmers are esteemed the best in Wales. Great efforts have been made of late years to improve the course of agriculture by gentlemen inviting Norfolk farmers to live under them; and in the breed of oxen and sheep, the cattle from Herefordshire, and the sheep of that county and of the South Downe, have been introduced for the purpose of effecting improvement. The mountains are barren of wood, but they supply a moderate living to very large flocks of small sheep. The native oxen and horses are also small, but are bred in great numbers by the Carmarthenshire farmers. Here are coal-mines, and excellent quarries of stone. Its commerce consists in exports of wrought-iron, coals, and stone, with some corn and butter, for the market. The manufactures cor

- cepting of the wrought-iron) of stockings and fiannels for home use.
- ABERGWILLY, 4 miles N.E. from Carmarthen. Popula. 2,183. Fairs, Oct. 2 and 27, cattle, horses, and pedlary. Here there was a College founded in the year 1287, by Thomas Beck, Bishop of St. David's; rents 42l., now worth 840l.

CAERNARVONSHIRE.

A county of North Wales, surrounded on all sides by the sea, excepting on the east, where it is bounded by Denbighshire and a small part of Merionethehire. It is about 45 miles long and 13 broad. It is divided into ten hundreds. Its principal river is the Conway. It has one city, Bangor, one borough, Caernarvon, and four other market towns, namely, Aberconway, Nevin, Pwilheli, and Crickeith. It is in the PROVINCE of CANTERBURY, in the DIOCESE of BANGOR, and in the NORTHERN CIRcuit. It sends two members to parliament, one for the shire, and one for the borough of Caernarvon. The aspect of this county is very mountainous, the mountains becoming precipices in many places, and the vales being narrow and long. The famous chain of hills called Snowdon is in this county. The agriculture of Cuernaryonshire is necessarily of the pastoral kind; or, at least, so large a part of it is under-pasture of one sort or another, that dairy-farming, and cattle, horse and sheep breeding, are the occupations of the Caernarvonshire farmer. Where corn is grown, the principal crops are barley and oats. The horned cattle are smaller still than those of the neighbouring county of Angleson, and the sheep are exceedingly diminutive, a fleece of their wool not weighing more than two pounds. Many goats are reared with the sheep, but not se many as formerly. Weol is a great article of produce of the county, and employment is found throughout the year for a great many hands in carding and spining the wool of the flocks, and from this is also manufactured large quantities of coarse cloth, stockings, and linsey-woolsey. The trade of the county consists of its exports of these, together with some of its natural productions, such as slate and stone; but it is from the sale of black cattle that it derives its main riches, and these are sent to the fairs of the English counties. It has no mines of any consequence.

- BANGOR is a city of North Wales, is the county of Caernarvon, and 251 miles north-west of London. This city is aituated between two ridges of rocks, in a long narrow valley which opens to the blenai; it consists of one long street of well-built houses roofed with alate. It is therefore a very pretty place, and being near the high-road to Holyhead, is much visited by strangers. It was once a considerable town, the evidences of which are frequently met with in the foundations of houses that have been found on digging the ground of the neighbourhood: indeed, it is pretty well ascertained that it must formerly have reached as far as the Ferry, called Bangor Ferry. Its antiquity is thought to be very great, but nothing positive as to its history previous to the year 525 is ascertained. At that time Deiniol founded a monastery there, which was afterwards well endowed by Maelgwyn Gwynedd. The celebrated Earl of Chester built a strong castle on a rocky eminence near the Mensi, of which the ruins may still be seen. Out of the monastery arose the Bishopric of Bangor, and the original founder became the first bishop. The diocese now comprises all Caernarvonshire, except four parishes, all Anglesen, half of Merionethshire, fourteen parishes of Denbighshire, and seven of Montgomeryshire. The cathedral (with the town) has stood many vicissitudes. It was destroyed in 1071 by the English. When King John invaded Wales in 1210, he seized the then bishop, Robert de Shrewsbury, and made him pay a ransom of 500 hawks. It suffered again in the reigns of Henry III., and Henry IV.; and, in the insurrection under Owen Glendwr, it was laid in ruins. In 1492 the present building was begun by Bishop Dean, and, in 1532, the body and steeple were erected by Bishop Skeffington. It stands in a large court, surrounded by a wall, and consists of a choir, nave, transept, two aisles, and a square tower. The windows were handsomely ornamented with stained glass, but, in the civil wars of Charles I., the soldiers destroyed these amongst other things. In the inside there are a few monuments, the most conspicuous being one of Owen Gwynedd, one of the ancient kings of Wales. Before the Reformation there was a Dominican Friary here, founded in 1276, but granted by Edward VI. to one Thomas Brown, who disposed of it for a free school, to which use it is still put. There is an Hospital, which was established by Bishop Rowlands for six poor men; and a Dispensary founded at the last Jubilee, by the people of Ban-A very nest and commodious bishop's palace, built by Bishop Skef-fington, stands a little below the cathedral. The popula. is 5,579. The markets

DENBIGHSHIRE.

A COUNTY of North Wales, bounded on the North by the Irish sea; on the East by Flintshire and Shropshire; on the South by Merionethshire; and on the West by Caernsrvon. It is 48 miles long, and about twenty miles broad, It is divided into six hundreds; namely, Bromfield, Chirk, Isalod, Isalulas, Ru-thin, and Yale. Its principal rivers are, the Clwyd, the Conway, and the Dee. The market-towns are, Denbigh, Abergeley, Llangollen, Llanwrst, Ruthin, and Wrexham. It is in the Pro-VINCE of CANTERBURY, in the DIOCESE of St. Asapu, and in the Northean CIRCUIT. It sends two members to parliament, one for the shire, and one for the town of Denbigh. The western and the northern parts of this county are mountainous, but some districts in the south and south-east are pretty level, and are fine pasture-lands. In the south-western part the country is well-wooded. The proprietors of land in this county seem to be very desirous of improving the system of farming, for there are many societies for the improvement of agriculture in the different districts. It is essentially a grazing county, not more than one-third of it being arable land. Its agricultural produce is corn, cattle, and cheese. It has mines of coal, iron, lead; quarres of excellent slate and building storbut, of the mines, the coal only are a much value. Its manufactures are course cloths, flannels, and stockings, all manufactured out of the wool of the county, and in these articles it has a pretty good trade.

FLINTSHIRE.

A COUNTY of North Wales, bounded on the north by the Irish sea, and on the northeast by the Dee estuary; on the east by Cheshire; and south and south-westward by Denhighshire. It is about 27 miles in length, and 10 in breadth. It is divided into five hundreds, Colesbill, Maylor, Mold, Prestayn, and Rhyddian. The rivers of this county are the Dee, the Clwyd, the Alun, the Terrig, the Wheler, and the Elwy. It contains five market towns, namely, Flint, St. Asaph, Mold, Caerwis, and Holywell. It is in the PROVINCE of CANTERBURY, in the DIOCESES Of St. ASAPH and CHRSTER, and in the Northern Circuit; and it sends two members to parliament, one for the shire, and one for the borough of Flint. This is by far the smallest sounty of Wales. It is hilly, if not mountainous; but especially on the shore of the Dee. These hills are every-where intermixed with valleys, not ill-wooded, bearing good crops of wheat and herley, and excellent pasture; but it is in the latter particularly that the county abounds, four-sixths of it being grazing land, one-sixth arable, and the rest The seil of the valleys varies from a clayey loam to a gravelly leam. The mountains produce coal, lead, freestone, and limestone. The two former are exported to Chester in great abundence. It has no manufactures of any consequence.

ABENBURY-FECHAM, in Wrexham parish (Denbigh), but itself in Maylor hundred in this county. Popula. returned with Wrexham.

ST. ASAPH, a city of North Wales, is situated on a small elevation between the rivers Clwyd and Elwy, in the county of Flint, and at the distance of 209 miles north-west from London. The town itself is a very poor place, the houses very low and small, and ranged in one long street; but the surrounding country is beautiful, healthful, and fertile. The diocese comprises the whole of Fliatshire except three or four parishes, all Deabighabire except the Deanery of Dryfryn Clwyd and three chapelries, half the county of Merioneth, three parishes in Caernaryonshire, thirtyseven in Montgomeryshire, and elem in Shrepshire. This is a very social see, owing its azigin to one Kenngen. to whom the site of St. Asset was given by Maelgwyn Gwynedd, Prince of North Wales in 560. His institution were a Cathedral and a College, and which he placed Assa, or Assph; be it is not recorded that any prelate was to gularly consecrated to the see till the 12th century, the cense of which is my posed to be the continual violent disessigns, sometimes from myssics ly foreigners, semetimes purely and which distracted the country up to. for some time after, the reign of Filliam I. The first prelate was Gillert and he was succeeded by Geofin of Moumouth. The original path a building of wood, and this was replaced by one built of stone, which beng burned down in 1283, was snowed by another that was also barned down after standing about 190 years. In ruins of this latter remained newly century untouched, and then the per sent building was begun. It is seite large nor conspicuous for its best; though, in its eastern main winder. has some very handsome stated glass and some tracery in imitation of parts of Tintern Abbey in Monmouthshire. has a nave, two aisles, and a transpt. and a square tower ninety feet high. A bishop's palace has been newly elected the old one having been suffered no to decay. The town is whelly me portant as to trude and manufacture. There was a free grammar-achool feature of the trude and in 1570 h.m. ed in 1573 by Bishop Hughes, s prebenefactor to the town and the m Popula. 2,755. ## GLAMORGANSHIRE.

A MARITIME county of South Wales, bounded on the north by Brecknockshire and part of Carmarthenshire; on the east by Monmouthshire; on the south by the Bristol Channel; and on the west by Curmarthenshire. It is about 48 miles in length, and about 28 in breadth. It is divided into eleven hundreds, namely, Caerphilly, Cowbridge, Dinas, Powis, Kibber, Llangwelack, Miskin, Neath, Newcastle, Ogmore, and Swanseu. Its principal rivers are, the Rhymny, the Luff, the Ogmore, the Avon, the Neath, and the Tavey. It has one city, Llandaff, and nine market towns, Bridgend, Caerphilly, Llantrissaint, Merthyr-Tydvil, Cardiff, Swansea, Cowbridge, Neath, and Penrice. It is in the PROVINCE of CANTERBURY, in the Diocess of LLANDAFF, and in the Southern Circuit. It sends two members to parliament, one for Cardiff, and one for the shire. This county is mountainous in the whole of the northern part, that is, north of Liantrissaint and Neath. The mountains are bleak and woody; but with, here and there, comparatively fertile valleys. The woods are valuable, particularly where they are in the vicinity of coal and iron mines, and the waste parts of the mountains serve as a sheep-walk, and as a sort of pasturage for herds of cattle during a great part of the year. The soil of the mountainous district is a dark peat earth, diversified by brownish gravel; that of the lowland district, or the vale of Glamorgan, is, generally speaking, a fertile brown loam upon clay. A great part of the northern part of the county is uninclosed, and used as waste by the farmers who occupy small farms in the valleys. These valley-farms produce good wheat and barley, but the system of farming is that of growing these crops till the land will bear no more, then laying it up for fallow. In the southern parts a different system is pursued. Here wheat, barley, and oats are also grown, and in good quantity, but turnips, vetches, and mangelwurzel, are grown in their turn. Two fifths of this county is arable, the rest, for the greater part, pasture, either good or inferior. The cattle are of a very good kind, generally brown or black, good feeders, and the cows producing milk in good quantity. The horses are strong, very active, and not so undersized as in other parts of Wales, and the sheep have been improved till they are really good both in carcase and in wool. The mines are of coal and iron. Its principal manufacture is of iron. The chief iron-works are at Merthyr Tydvil and Cyfartha. There are manufactories of copper at Aberavon, Neath, and Swansea. At Swansea there is a large manufactory of earthenware; and woollens are manufactured at Bridgend, and this, as well as flannels, are manufactured in other places, chiefly for home use. The chief articles of exportation are coals, iron, and copper.

LLANDAFF is a very ancient city of South Wales. It is 162 miles W. from London, and is situated in a beautiful country immediately on the banks of the Tof, from which circumstance etymologists derive its name. It is, as a town, a poor miserable thing, consisting of nothing but a cluster of poor cottages, with here-and-there a somewhat superior house, and its only trade is that carried on by the very few shopkeepers of the place, who supply it with necessaries. The see is reported to be very ancient indeed, founded in the year 180; but of this there is not sufficient proof. It is said by Tanner, however, to have been founded by St. Dubritius, in the year 522, and it now comprises the chief part of Glamorganshire, and all Monmouthshire, except seven parishes. The only attraction in this city is its elegant cathedral, which is of architecture partly Gothic, partly Saxon, and partly Norman. The western front is extremely beautiful; over a handsome door-porch is a figure standing upon a stone tablet, one hand partly raised, and the other holding the pastoral staff, and with a mitre on the head. This is supposed to be the figure of one of the earlier bishops of Llandaff. Above it are some very elegant lancetshaped windows, and shove these another figure, but in a sitting posture, and holding a book in one hand. A very ancient and beautiful cross forms the summit of this front. On each side were two handsome towers, one only of which now remains, and this one was very much damaged by a storm in 1703. The whole length of this building is 300 feet, and the breadth 80.

Several persons of meta have, been beried shows, and their measurests are preserved in the interior of the othedral. Near to the cathedral are the ruins of an ancient pulsee of the bishops. It is said to have been destroyed by Owen Glendwr in his insurrection. Population is 1,138. The fairs are beld on Feb. 9, Whit-Monday, cattle ast stockings.

MERIONETHSHIRE.

A COUNTY of North Wales, bounded on a the North by Caernarvonshire and Denbighshire; on the East by Denbigh-shire and Montgomeryshire; on the South by Cardiganshire; and on the West by the Irish are and Carmarvonshire. It is 35 miles long, and 25 miles broad. It is divided into five hundreds; namely, Arduddwy, Edernion, Estimaner, Penllyn, and Talybont. The rivers are, the Dee, the Maw, and the Dovey. There are six market-towns, Bals, Corwen, Dolgelly, Harteigh, Dinasmowdwy, and Towyn. It is in the Province of Cantersury, in the Diocess of Bancon, and in the NORTHERN CINCOIT. The county sends one member to parliament. This is an exceedingly mountainous, barren, and bleak county. The climate is cold, the hills being covered with snow during some months of the year. Of the whole extent of country compriced in this county, not one half is in any way enclosed, and not above oneeighth is arable. It is said to have been pletty well wooded formerly, but that is not the case now. The soil of the mountains is a shallow, light loam upon rocks; that of the valleys and low-lands a peaty or clayey loam. The agriculture of the county is more breeding and grazing of cattle and sheep; the former in the valleys and level tracts, and the inter on the hills, where they mix with herds of gouts. The manufactures of the county are ineclasiderable as exports. They consist of those of inferior woollen goods, of strong costse cloths, druggets, kerseymeres, sannels, stockings, gloves, wigs, &c., manufactured from the wool of the sheep fed on the hills. There are no mines in the county,

MONTGOMERYSHIRE.

Thus is a county of North Wales. It is bounded on the North by Denbighshire; on the East and North-east by Shropshire; on the South-east by Radnorshire; on the South-west by Cardiganahire, and, on the West, by Merionethabire. It is about 35 miles long, and about 50 miles broad. It is divided into nine hundreds; namely, Cawrse, Denddwr, Llanfyllin, Llanidloes, Ma-chynlleth, Mathrafel, Montgomery, Newton, and Pool. The rivers are, the Tracth-bach, the Maw, the Dovey; and the sources of the Wye and Severn are in this county. The market-towns are, Llanydloes, Llanvair, Llanvyllen, Machynlieth, Montgomery, Newtown, and Welshpool. It is in the PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY, in the DIOCESE OF BANGOR, and in the Northern Circuit. The county returns two members to parliament, one for the shire, and one for the borough of Montgomery. This is a very mountainous county: the midland, western, and south-western parts of it are particularly barren and bleak, and, therefore, unfavourable to the growth of corn; but here are, nevertheless, some narrow and very fertile valleys, in which the soil is deep and productive. The eastern part of the county is less hilly and very fertile, and agriculture is there in a better state than in any other part of the county. The soil of the valleys is chiefly a clayey loam, and that of the hills a shallow loam upon a rocky substratum. In the best parts of the county, the crops are wheat, barley, and outs; following one another till the soil will bear ho more, and then it remains a ley. Turnips, buckwheat, vetches and peas, have been long introduced, but they are not generally cultivated. The eattle of Monigomery are of two kinds, the brindled, short-legged native breed, and the longer and larger animal, produced by a cross with the Devon. There are also two kinds of sheep; the one peculiar to the Kerry hills, an ill-proportioned animal, but producing very good wool; the other, a black-faced, fine-woolled sheep, bred on a mountainous ridge, beginning near Welshpool. There are two or three breeds of horses: a little, almost wild animal, that roves about the mountains, and that is driven when at three years old in berds to the fairs of neighbouring counties. These are called merlyns, and they are, in fact, ponies, of a hardy and active kind. larger breed thun this, also found in Montgomery, appears like a cross between the merlyn and the English horse. There is still another breed, that is said to originate in a cross between the native horses and some Spanish horses that were imported in this country from Spain. Montgomery is the best wooded, county in Wales. There are no mines of consequence in it. The manufacture of finnels it has long been fumous for :it is carried on wholly in the southwestern part of it, and, principally, near Llanydioes. This manufacture was formerly carried on entirely by hand, but, of late, mills for carding have been erected on the divers streams he vourable for the purpose, and manufac-tories at Newtown, Welshpool, and other plates, have nearly taken it out of

- the hands of the farmers and cottagers, who used to carry on the manufacture in their own respective houses.

PEMBROKESHIRE.

- A COUNTY of South Wales, bounded on the North-east by Cardiganshire, on the East by Carmarthenshire, and, on the other sides, by the Irish sea. It is about 30 miles long, and about 13 miles broad. It is divided into seven hundreds; namely, Castle-Martin, Dewsland, Dungleddy, Kemess, Kilgerran, Marbeth, and Rouse. The principal rivers are, the Eastern and Western Cleddans, the Gwaine, the Biran, the Kiog, the Nevern, and the Radford. The market-towns are, St. David's, Haverfordwest, Fishguard, Kilgerran, Nurberth, Milford, Newport, Pembroke, Tenby. It is in the PROVINCE OF CAN-TERBURY, in the DIOCESE OF ST. DAwid's, and in the Southern Circuit. It sends three members to parliament, one for the shire, and one each for the bo-
- roughs of Pembroke and Heverfordwest. This county, though hilly, is not mountainous, like the majority of Welsh counties. There is, to be sure, one ridge of lofty blils, running from Fishguard in Carmarthenshire, which are called the Percelly mountains. The soils vary: they are chiefly these: strong red loam with reddish clay beneath; dark grey loam with blue rock beneath; and a spongy pest with clay underneath. The crops most usual are, wheat, barley, and cata, and little or no manure. The oats, and little or no manure. farmers crop their land till it will no longer bear a crop, and then they suffer it to rest. There is a great deal of common-land in this county, and it is used as sheep-walk, or as grazing-land for cattle; the woods are chiefly in the middle of the county, but they are no extensive. The horned cattle of Pembrokeshire are of a very superior quality: they are black, and not very large, but are well known in England, and are sought after at the English fairs. The horses also are good; a strong and active little animal, well suited to the saddle, and otherwise exceedingly useful. The sheep are not of any particular breed. There are no mines of any consequence in the county; and there are no manufactures worth mentioning.

DALE, 8 miles W. from Milford. Populs. 387.

ST. DAVIDS, a city of South Wales. and distant 271 miles W. by N. from Loudon, is situated on a promontor jetting out into the Atlantic ocean. and having St. George's channel to the north, and the Bristol channel to the south. As a town, it is a place of 13 earthly consequence, consisting of the thing more than a broken line of por cottages, with here-und-there a dwellar something superior to the rest. Ic. merly a really grand place, it now retains nothing but the traces of the grandour; such as the ruins of whele streets and lanes in all directions in its vicinity, the names even of many of which tradition has not preserved. At the western extremity of the main street. there stands an ancient cross, rour! which it was the custom, from time immemorial, to hold the weekly mukets and the fairs, but the place havist become so little populous as not to require the market, the fairs only are now held here. St. Davids was, far a long period, an archbishoprick, having xon sufragah Mahousicke. It has boom, however, many, many years a simple hishoprick, the disease consisting of the whole counties of Pembroke, Carmarthen, Brecknock, and Radnor, with parts of the counties of Monmouth, Hereford, Montgomery, and Glamorgan. The early history of this city is involved in great obscurity, but the popular opinion is, that St. David, the son of a prince of Cardigan, after studying in the Isle of Wight, came here (this being his native place) and founded a monastery, which in the course of time became an archiepiscopal see, and David its archbishop. It is certain, that the shrine of St. David was held in great repute by pilgrims, who, of all degrees, visited it in great numbers. Amongst them was William I., Henry II., and Edward I. The sathedral, together with the residences of the clergy and the burying-ground, are within a walled-in space of nearly a mile in circumference, and which has four handsome entrance-gates, named Bunning's-Gate, Patrick's-Gate, Tower-Gate, and White-Gata. The cathedral itself is a large Gothic building, in the form of a cross, having a lofty square tower, surmounted by square pinnacles. In the inside are several handsome monuments of renowned persons: one of Rhys ab Gruffydd, Prince of South Wales, in 1196; one of Bishop Morgan, and one of Bishep Gower, both these prelates having been conspicuous benefactors of the sae; and one of Edmund Tudor, Earl of Richmond. In the chancel is the shrine of St. David, with four recesses in which his votaries used to deposit their offerings. These monuments are in pretty good preservation, though they were despoiled of all that was available about them by the parliamentary army in the reign of Charles I. A College was founded here for a Master and Seven Priests or Fellows, by John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, and Bishop Houghton. This was dissolved by Edward VI., and it is now erosen property, and leased to a Mr. Edwards, of Sealyham. The only part of the college now remaining is the chapel, which is a specious, and must have been very handsome building. The bip's palace is a beautiful and ancient edifice, standing within the above-men-tioned wall, and a little way off on the south-west side of the eathedral. This paless was built by Bishop Gower, who was bishop of the see in 1399. Two sides of it only are remarking complets; but these are sufficient to show how grand a building it was reflechalt was sixty feet long by twenty bibad; the hitchen thirty-six feet long by twenty-eight broad, and an spartment, called King John's Hall, was ninety-six feet long by thirty-three broad! At one corner of this hall is the bushop's own chapel, and, at the entrance to the hall, are imperfect statues of Edward III. and his queen. The whole is now in a ruinous condition. The town has no manufactures, and its trade comists of merely a little indispensable shopkeeping. Popula. 2,240.

DINAS, 2 miles W. from Newport. Popula. 753.

RADNORSHIRE.

A COUNTY of South Wales, bounded on the north by Montgomeryshire; on the east by Shropshire and Herefordshire: on the south and south-west by Brecknockshire; and on the north-west by Cardiganshire. It is about 31 miles long, and about 26 broad. It is divided into six hundreds, namely, Colwyn, Kevenlys, Knighton, Paincastle, Radnor, Rhiader. The principal rivers are, the Wye, the Elan, the Are, the Somergil, and the Lug. The market towns are Radnor, Knighton, Presteigne, and Rhayadergwy. It is in the Province of Can-TERMURY, in the Diocese of Llandaff, and in the Southenn Circuit. It sends two members to parliament, one for the shire, and one for the borough of New Radnor. Radnorshire is not mountainous, but it is very hilly. The soils are various, from a dark grey loam to reddish brown and deep loam, and from that to a spungy worthless peat earth. About the vale of Radnor is some of the best soil of the sounty,-and here wheat, barley, dats, rye, and peas, are cultivated. The mountain and waste lands of this county comprise about two-thirds of it, but the whole of this extensive tract is pretty good sheepwalk. The arable about one-sixth, and the pasture and woods another sixth. The horned cattle of Radvorshire are small, of a red colout, and very good. The sheep are very small, very hardy, and excellent mest. The horses are also small, but, like all Welsh horses, active, strong and hardy. The county contains no mines, though lead and copper ore has been discovered in one district of it. The manufactures are course woollens, and finnnels and stockings, which the labouring people make for their own consumption.
